BLACK WOMEN ARE ALL TOO OFTEN UNSEEN IN THE
NATIONAL CONVERSATION ABOUT RACIAL PROFILING,
POLICE BRUTALITY, AND LETHAL FORCE.

SAY HER NAME | BACKGROUND

Elevating the Crisis of Police Violence Facing

BLACK WOMEN

Although Black women are routinely killed, raped and beaten by the police, their experiences are rarely foregrounded in popular understandings of police brutality. Yet, inclusion of Black women's experiences is critical to effectively combating racialized state violence for Black communities and other communities of color.

Say Her Name, a recently released brief from the African American Policy Forum and Andrea J. Ritchie gathers stories of Black women who have been killed by police and who have experienced gender-specific forms of police violence, provides some analytical frames for understanding their experiences, and broadens dominant conceptions of who experiences state violence and what it looks like.

Say Her Name begins to shine a light on the ways that Black women are policed in ways that are similar to other members of our communities - whether it's police killings, "stop and frisk," "broken windows policing," or the "war on drugs." It also pushes open the frame to include other forms and contexts of police violence - such as sexual assault by police, police abuse of pregnant women, profiling and abusive treatment of lesbian, bisexual, transgender and gender nonconforming Black women, and police brutality in the context of responses to violence - which bring Black women's experiences into even sharper focus."

Together, we will push back on the myth that Black women are are not also at risk and reject the notion that their strength and resilience means the challenges they face do not need to be prioritized in our communities.

SAY HER NAME | LEVERAGING SOCIAL MEDIA

The #BlackLivesMatter movement has shown that social media can be a powerful rallying force for social movements. Activists are now able to document injustices, spread information and mobilize the public in real time. As we strive for the inclusion of Black women in our efforts to combat anti-Black police violence, it is critical to continue building on the social media impetus generated by the resurgent racial justice movement. The fact that #SayHerName was the second most popular hashtag in New York on the day of May 20 vigil shows that social media activists are hungry to engender the movement. It is up to each of us to make that happen!

Support this effort by engaging with #SayHerName content and creating your own! Post these tweets and images and help build the movement to center Black women's lives in racial justice organizing.
