NASHVILLE, Tenn. -- A man is arrested in Nashville for human trafficking of a woman for sex and promoting prostitution.

Metro Police found 34-year-old Antoine Williams, of Milwaukee, in Nashville on Saturday, after warrants were obtained for his arrest in the investigation. At his motel room on Elm Hill Pike, police found and arrested 22-year-old Sarah Ostovich, who claimed to be Williams' fianc, along with their five-month-old daughter. She acknowledged posting Internet ads of her own and engaging in prostitution with "customers," according to police.

The investigation began on November 11, when police met with a 19-year-old woman at the Women's Mission who called a human trafficking hotline for help. She tells police she came to Nashville with her 2-year-old son last month for the TSU homecoming game.

The teenager says she was approached by a pimp who used the nickname "Success," who later identified himself as Williams. He allegedly enticed her with nice things and travel. The woman said he placed a prostitution-related ad on the Internet and transported her to hotels to meet with "customers."

Johnson's bond is $75,000. Ostovich is jailed on charges of aggravated child abuse, promoting prostitution, marijuana possession and possession of drug paraphernalia. She is also being held on $75,000 bond. Her daughter is in the custody of the Tennessee Department of Children's Services.
