We have a tight-knit community, where professors often invite their students over for dinner (and vice versa). When a student is struggling, he gets coordinated help from not only his professors, but also his coaches, club advisors, and brothers on campus. This is one advantage of a campus where everyone knows everyone and feels a common bond of brotherhood. We know that many students (and parents) are concerned that a liberal arts education does not lead to a great career. We are happy to dispel that myth. One in eight Wabash alumni holds the title of chairman, president, owner, or CEO of a company. PayScale.com just ranked Wabash as number 50 on its list of best returns on investment in higher education.
