

The Poem Einstein

by Louise Greenvold

He built a semaphore as he would a house of cards.
His father’s company provided the wireless.
“Nothing after this,” he said to the world's ears.
At sixteen he hawned a paper on the state of the ether.
He was an engineer, the kin of all the moving sport
but found himself too close or too much alone.
He had a slight addiction to coffee and tobacco and was well known for his passion for games.
He corresponded without limit and he was a mysterious man known to the world.
He put ideas into words as if addressing an enveolope
and always found the words of others a port.

The Modernist Mystery

by JoM Coetze

A modernist mystery

Anatomy of the novel

by JoM Coetze

The novel is a modernist work, characterized by its use of irony and its exploration of the complexities of human nature. The Middlesteins, a suburban Jewish family, are facing a crisis when Gertie is diagnosed with Crohn’s disease. The arrival of a young boy and a Puerto Rican boy to help out adds to the complexity of the story. The novel is a masterpiece of modernist literature, exploring themes of family, friendship, and love in the face of adversity.
