Children's charity and MP team up to tackle child sexual exploitation

Barnardo's is teaming up with MP for Rotherham Sarah Champion to conduct a parliamentary inquiry into child sexual exploitation and trafficking within the UK.

The inquiry aims to shine a light on these terrible crimes and what the authorities are doing to protect and support victims.

Evidence will be collected from victims and professionals involved with protecting vulnerable children including the police and members of the legal profession.

The inquiry is being launched to coincide with the 10th anniversary of the Sexual Offences Act and will test how effectively the legislation is working.

Barnardo's has been tackling child sexual exploitation since 1994 and is the leading provider of support for sexually exploited children with 23 specialist services in the UK.

The number of sexually exploited children known to Barnardo's rose by 22 per cent to 1,452 in the UK last year and 37 per cent during the past three years.

Sarah Champion MP for Rotherham said:

"Recent high profile cases have shown us the terrible human cost of child sexual exploitation. The stories of trafficking and abuse heard in courtrooms across the country have been shocking.

"It is vital we have a justice system that places the needs of victims at its very heart, supported by robust legislation that is fit for purpose. This inquiry will shine a light on how effectively we are currently working together to fight these awful crimes."

Barnardo's UK director of strategy Puja Darbari said:

"Through our work with sexually exploited young people we see first-hand the devastating impact of these terrible crimes.

"Children who are sexually exploited are uniquely vulnerable and we must listen to what they are telling us if we are going to protect them.

"We must relentlessly strive to keep all children safe and bring about justice for the young victims of sexual exploitation."
