

Pacific Northwest Culture & Presbyterian Identity

Courses begin September 28, 2017

Deadline to register is September 15, 2017

Professional Development Student Cost: $210 per course

Books and/or scholarships may be available to students. Contact steanj@seattleu.edu for more details.

Pacific Northwest Culture & Presbyterian Identity I and II

The focus of this two-course sequence is to assist students in:

- Identifying and analyzing the pressing challenges and responses to being religious in this region
- Enlarging progressive theological fluency in matters of life, worldview, faith and witness in the Pacific Northwest
- Refining relevant leadership acumen that anticipates and is responsive to the societal challenges in this region, which likewise impact the country and the world.

Distinct from a course on the history, polity or doctrine of a particular tradition, this course will prepare students for fluency both within the Presbyterian tradition, and within the complex cultural challenges and opportunities that religion experiences today in this region.

These courses are open to professional development students (non-degree seeking) as well as current School of Theology and Ministry students.

All students are welcome to register for this course online at:
seattleu.edu/stm/professional-development

SEATTLEU
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY AND MINISTRY

Pacific Northwest Culture & Presbyterian Identity

Courses begin September 28, 2017

Deadline to register is September 15, 2017

Professional Development Student Cost: $210 per course

Books and/or scholarships may be available to students. Contact steanj@seattleu.edu for more details.

Pacific Northwest Culture & Presbyterian Identity I and II

The focus of this two-course sequence is to assist students in:

- Identifying and analyzing the pressing challenges and responses to being religious in this region
- Enlarging progressive theological fluency in matters of life, worldview, faith and witness in the Pacific Northwest
- Refining relevant leadership acumen that anticipates and is responsive to the societal challenges in this region, which likewise impact the country and the world.

Distinct from a course on the history, polity or doctrine of a particular tradition, this course will prepare students for fluency both within the Presbyterian tradition, and within the complex cultural challenges and opportunities that religion experiences today in this region.

These courses are open to professional development students (non-degree seeking) as well as current School of Theology and Ministry students.

All students are welcome to register for this course online at:
seattleu.edu/stm/professional-development

SEATTLEU
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY AND MINISTRY

