Profile

Erin is a graduate of Rosalind Franklin University of Medicine and Science where she received her Doctorate of Physical Therapy and joined our IBJI team in June of 2017. Erin is very enthusiastic about physical therapy and assessing biomechanical deficits in high-functioning athletes and orthopedic patients. She values the combination of a hands-on treatment approach coupled with functional therapeutic exercises to guide the rehabilitation process. She is always looking to learn and progress her abilities and consistently dedicates time to continuing education. Erin is interested in working with all age groups and demographics, and strives to provide the highest quality of patient care.

When not in the clinic, Erin loves participating in anything physically active - from volleyball to yoga to running she is always on the go. She has a background in coaching high school volleyball at Libertyville High School where she also implemented an injury prevention program tailored to adolescent volleyball players. Erin received her B.S. in Marketing from the University of Iowa, and remains a loyal Hawkeye fan to date.
