Muslim men fired for refusing to deliver alcohol

12 Comments /  Share /  Tweet /  Stumble /  Email

PEORIA, IL. – On January 7, 2017, two Muslim men were fired from their trucking jobs because they refused to deliver alcohol. Islam forbids consuming alcohol, and the men claimed that their religious values would not allow them to assist others consume beer.

In April, the trucking company was sued, claiming that the men were fired because of their religious beliefs in violation of their rights to religious freedom in the First Amendment of the Constitution. The trucking company argued that the men were fired for not doing their job and the company is not required to provide special treatment for people's religious beliefs.

A federal court is set to decide the case in July.
