Water safety

Vermont's lakes and rivers provide many opportunities to cool off and enjoy swimming among the state's natural beauty. It's important to remember that even a seemingly benign swimming hole can present hazards. The conditions of many familiar spots on rivers are different from past years.

"Heavy rain this summer has caused our waterways to rise and currents to increase, so it's even more important for all to be alert and careful as they enjoy our lakes, ponds and rivers this summer," said Tom Anderson, the state's public safety commissioner.

The most basic safety steps is to never swim alone, whether you are in a natural waterway or a swimming pool. If one of you encounters trouble, the other can help if it is safe to do so, or get additional help.

Other considerations when venturing to swimming holes include:

- Be aware of your surroundings, including the current and location of rocks.

- Beware of slippery rocks. Many accidents at swimming holes are caused by falls from slippery rocks.

- Know the conditions. Has it rained recently and has it influenced the current?

- Swim sober. Drugs and alcohol can dull your senses, impair your judgement, and slow response time.

- Be realistic about your abilities. Understand your strength, abilities, and shortcomings as a swimmer.

Fishing records set

Vermont Fish & Wildlife biologists certified two fish caught in Lake Champlain tributaries earlier this year, as new Vermont state records.

A new state record carp, weighing 33.25 pounds and measuring 40 inches in length, was caught in Otter Creek in the town of Paton in April by Ferrisburgh angler Chase Stokes. The fish had a total girth of 26.5 inches at its widest point.

A new state record redhorse sucker has also been certified. Mike Elwood of Burlington landed the fish in the Winoski River in the town of Colchester in May. It weighed 9.96 pounds, measured 29 inches in length and had a total girth of 18 inches.

The former record carp weighed 33 pounds and measured 35 inches in length, while the previous record redhorse sucker weighed 9 pounds and measured 27.5 inches in length.

Rick Skiba

Fifty years ago, in 1967, the No. 1 bestselling record album in the country was "Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band." Rick Skiba, of Howlin' Mouse Records in Rutland, remains a fan. With touring as a live band behind them, The Beatles had as much time as they wanted to spend in the studio. They spent a year on "Sergeant Pepper's." Skiba says Paul McCartney's inspirations that year were not only the Beach Boys' album "Pet Sounds," but Frank Zappa and the Mothers of Invention as well. Skiba says, "Paul claimed that 'Sergeant Pepper's' was The Beatles' 'Freak Out.'"

The album has been remastered and re-released in the full range of formats for a new generation. To watch a video with Skiba celebrating the endurance of Beatlemania into the 21st century and 50 years of the group's psychedelic concept album, visit bit.ly/0721Talkpix
