

Workshop Topic Summaries

Giving Instructions Kids will Follow

Ever been frustrated because your children won't follow your instructions? Developing an instruction routine for your family will help both you and your kids. In this workshop you will learn the 5 steps to giving an instruction and 5 steps to teach your children to receive an instruction. Once this becomes, well...routine, you will find your children much more cooperative and ready to respond. This workshop is very practical, very doable and very fresh.

Using A Break to Reach the Heart

The first step to a changed heart is to calm down, stop fighting and be willing to talk about the problem. Children sometimes struggle to control their emotions. When tantrums, meltdowns and fits rage, little ones can't receive correction. That's when a Break is a parent's best friend. In this workshop, learn to use a Break effectively to reach your child's heart.

Correction Ideas that Touch the Heart

We want to go beyond behavior modification to the deeper place of a child's heart. The heart is where words, attitudes and actions are formed. By bringing correction that focuses on heart change, you will see real change over time. In this workshop you will find creative ideas for bringing correction that accomplishes more.

Ending Correction Times with Impact

Ever experience an awkwardness following a time of correction with your children? When that tension lingers it can fester and produce distance in a parent/child relationship. Just as repentance is key to a healthy, growing relationship with God, an apology is important in personal relationships. In this workshop you'll learn how to end your correction times on a positive note while also modeling the steps to repentance.

Bringing Spiritual Training Home Again

Most of us agree that God commissioned parents to be the primary spiritual trainers in Deuteronomy 6. Yet many of parents find their weeks full of appointments, tasks and duties. How can parents make intentional spiritual training a priority? Family Time can help. Discover a fun, engaging, and lasting way to plant God's Word in your children. Then watch teachable moments sprout all week long.

Nine Functions of the Heart

The Bible uses the word heart over 750 times. The heart is critical in our submission to Christ and his work in our lives. In this workshop we explore what the Bible says about the heart and how a deeper understanding may impact our parenting. The heart is: a wrestling place, the center for commitments and determinations, where we connect with others, the seat of emotions, a spring for temptations and desires, experiences guilt and conviction of sin, holds passion about life, chooses values and convictions, and is where we connect with God.
