

is an a

Wellesley UU screening marriage equality documentary

This past June marked the two-year anniversary of Obergefell vs. Hodges, the Supreme Court case which affirmed marriage equality as a nation-wide civil right.

Summer film festivals marked the milestone by showing "The Freedom to Marry," a documentary released in March. That film now comes to Wellesley, sponsored by the LGBTQ Interest Group of the Unitarian Universalists of Wellesley.

Called a "must see" and "riveting," the film tells the inside story of the decades-long campaign to permit same-sex couples to marry. It follows Evan Wolfson, the architect of the movement, and Mary Bonauto, the main litigator, from the earliest days to the final dash to the Supreme Court.

"The Freedom to Marry" will be shown at noon on Sunday, November 5, at 309 Washington St., Wellesley. Light lunch will be provided. For more information, call (781-431-7423) or visit uuwellesley.org.