

Bishnumati River Clean Up

We hope to organise a huge clean up of the Bishnumati River.
In Katmandu Nepal.
The river is close to my heart as it runs alongside Guru Nanak Math Gurdwara where the Sikh Guru Nanak meditated deeply under a sacred tree.
The Bishnumati River is Gods natural Sarova.

The Bisnumati River, flowing in the Kathmandu Valley, originates at Tokha on Sivapuri Mountain, north of Kathmandu. It flows through the western part of old Kathmandu city. It a holy river for both Hindu and Buddhist people.
Sikhs treasure her as our Sikh Gurudwara sits along side her.

Literally, Bishnumati means the beloved river of Lord Vishnu.

Sobha Baghwati and Indrayani along with Kankeshowri temple - a few of the holiest places of the Kathmandu Valley are on the opposite banks of this river.

Bishnumati is one of the very important rivers of the valley. It provides water for drinking, cultivating agriculture and ritual purposes of the local citizens.

Unfortunately for the last 35 years it has been used as a dumping site.

The banks of the river need to be protected and strict education of dumping education need to be put in place.

An example project I would like to copy is the Bagmati river cleanup of which British Prince Phillip is the patron of <http://www.friendsofthebagmati.org.np>

I would cease this rare opportunity to bring together the many religions who hold this river sacred together along with many green Eco-friendly organisations.
I think the operation could be a fantastic opportunity to promote the harmonious unity of world religions and raising awareness for the sacredness of the earths rivers and how we must act now to educate all beings in care for our environment before it is too late.

All over the world our rivers are suffering due to pollution and plastics - we must do our best to save them.
