

RED TEAM

Why we need Red
Teaming

The modern organizations are too complex for any individual or group to thoroughly understand how it can be compromised.

“If you use one tactic twice, you should not use it a third time, and the Americans already had done basically the same thing six times.”

“Understanding the “Victory Disease,” From the Little Bighorn to Mogadishu and Beyond. GWOT Occasional Papers #3”

A good Red Team is a "thinking enemy"

The most efficient way to lose in a fight is to act without knowing your enemy.

There are no formulas or simple checklists for Red Teaming.
It's a dynamic process.

“Whether you run a corporation or a country, the stakes are high, and business as usual is no longer good enough.

More than ever, you need to know what your competitors and opponents are thinking. You need to anticipate the next crisis, prevent it if possible, and respond swiftly and effectively if not.”

Mark Mateski, Red Team Journal

If everything seems to be going well, you have obviously overlooked something.

Rule 81:

It is more complicated than you think.

Model the adversary

Remember:
When in doubt, Red Team it.
