This is what the competition calls a simulated wound

This type of wound is terrible for several reasons

- The colors are wrong (grey skin??)
- There is no depth to the wound bed
- It looks shiny and unrealistic

Durable, Skin-Safe and Realistic Wounds

Injuries Happen. It's the Preparation that Matters

When your first response team arrives, what will they see? Trauma, mass casualty incidents and workplace injuries that are not attractive.

Prepare your people for the real thing.

Not All Wounds are Created Equal

Trauma and injury affects body tissues in many ways, which is why we have created a catalogue of various simulated wounds.

Our products show the different depths, textures and colors that are consistent with the severity of the injury.

Some injuries are long and superficial, but not deep. Others cover more of the body and some wounds are serious and critical. Health and safety practitioners need to know what common injuries are and how to treat them before an emergency situation occurs.

Designed by healthcare and engineering professionals for realism and durability
