Puberty and adolescence bring new challenges for people on the autism spectrum and their families. These include issues surrounding sexuality and peer relations as well as new demands for community and scholastic function. Even so, this transition presents possible new paths for growth and progress. Dr. Feder will talk with us about both the concerns and the opportunities and provide some guiding ideas to help navigate this new territory.

Dr. Joshua Feder is a child and family psychiatrist with an active clinical practice in Solana Beach, seeing infants through adults and their families to address neuropsychiatric challenges. Dr. Feder also works at local, state and national levels advocating for patient choice in Evidence Based Practice. He Co-Chairs the State of California South Counties Autism and Related Disorders Task Force and testifies in clinical and policy related at the state and local levels.
