Disciples Women's Updates

Ladies in the Alabama/Northwest Florida gathered together during Regional Assembly in Fort Walton Beach, Florida. We honored our women in ministry during our luncheon on Saturday, April 26, 2014. Women were provided with informational packets for Disciples Women groups and received updates on our Honduras partnership. This included information about our plans to bring a Honduran lady to Quadrennial Assembly in Atlanta.

JUST WOMEN

Please support our Just Women magazine. The themes are “I See You With Compassion” in 2014 Winter. “Women of the Bible: Seeking Justice” will be featured in the Spring 2014 issue. This Bible Study is created and written by Disciples Women including our General Minister and President of the Christian Church (DOC), Rev. Dr. Sharon Watkins. The Summer issue’s theme is “I See You With Eyes of Grace – Nurturing Healthy Relationships”. “I See You Whole – Mental Health Wellness” will be explored in the Fall 2014 issue. All of these themes will also be developed at Quadrennial 2014. Don’t miss it! Order at www.discipleswomen.org.

Margie Lee from Dothan is our Quadrennial Promotional Coordinator. Arlene Pimentel, Quadrennial Assembly Coordinator of the International Disciples Women’s Ministries encourages all of us to like the Facebook page at www.dhm.disciples.org or check out www.discipleswomen.org. There are a multitude of resources available at the IDWM website. The theme is “I See You”. Participants are encouraged to create a mask to enter into a fundraiser for Human Trafficking. The entry fee is $10 and all proceeds will go to fight Human Trafficking. Human Trafficking victims are hidden in plain sight behind whatever masks their hidden feelings. Our Global Service Project will be the Minnie Vautrin China Fund to help women in China. Our Regional Service Project is split between The WellHouse (Human Trafficking Victims’ shelter) in Birmingham and bringing a Honduran woman to Quadrennial 2014.

Make plans to attend Quadrennial 2014 in Atlanta June 25th – June 29th at the Marriott Marquis Hotel. Go to www.discipleswomen.org and click on Quadrennial Assembly under Resource Pages.
Kylie, an active five-year-old, does not speak but she is learning sign language. Sometimes Kylie’s behavior is similar to what professionals see in children with Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD). Her parents want to attend church with Kylie and her two younger brothers. Unfortunately, several disappointing worship experiences have discouraged them from seeking out another church. They remain hopeful that they can eventually find a congregation committed to nurturing the spiritual growth of all their children.

Common Areas of Difference
A diagnosis of ASD indicates that an individual might be impacted in his or her social interaction, communication, and behavior. The word spectrum conveys that no two individuals are alike. There is a wide variety in how people can be affected. An understanding of possible differences can help church leaders and members plan for the inclusion of all children.

Language skills. Some individuals with ASD may be unable to speak or to use sign language, while others may possess a broad vocabulary but find grammar and sentence structure tricky. Sometimes their voices are too loud or too soft for the setting. Matching the content of the message (such as bad news) with the appropriate facial expression or voice tone is another type of struggle for some.

Social skills. Children with ASD find that reading social situations and making decisions about how to interact with others extremely hard. These types of differences can lead children to pull away from others. They may find eye contact or touch uncomfortable. Some children respond in the opposite way by charging into a group or acting aggressively toward others. Because social situations are not easy to analyze, a schedule or routine provides structure and a bridge to others for those with ASD. Any change in the routine can create anxiety.

Another feature that individuals with ASD can exhibit is a repetitive passion for one topic—such as trains, trucks, a favorite animal, or a book character. As a result, they may find it tough to relate to others who do not know as much about their topic or show little interest in it.

Sensory Responses. The sensory systems of many people with ASD are turned up to a higher volume. This creates a sensitivity to sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and feelings that would not be a problem for individuals without ASD. In striking contrast, the sensory systems for others with ASD are set way below the average for others. In this case, a child may not respond to conversation or touch.

Strategies for Inclusion
Barbara Newman, author of Autism and Your Church, outlines strategies that she uses with children and adults who have ASD. She believes that churches do not wish to exclude or isolate any individual but that they may not have the necessary information to include persons with different abilities. Her strategies open up the possibilities for welcoming all people (not just individuals with ASD).
ASD, but all those who find access to church life challenging, such as those who use wheelchairs; those with hearing loss or impaired vision; worshipers dealing with memory loss, dementia, or Alzheimer’s; and people who suffer from mental or chronic illness.

Strategy 1: Gather information. Newman suggests that the congregation appoint one person to contact the family, care facility, or group home to assess gifts and needs. Privacy is always a concern. Church teachers should show respect for the amount and type of information individuals wish to share and reassure families that information would only be shared at their request. Because they do it all the time, parents of children with autism: (a) may be tired of telling the same things to different people in every situation they encounter; (b) are good at outlining who their child is and what their child needs. Listening, practicing patience, and asking for clarification are greatly appreciated by parents.

Strategy 2: Share information as needed. Pastors, other worship leaders, teachers, mentors, and peers benefit from critical information in order to best plan and interact with children.

Strategy 3: Monitor sensory output. Newman suggests setting up a rest or “reset” area that individuals with ASD can use when they need a break from loud noises or too much social interaction. A small room with limited sound and few distractions works best. Headphones or sound blockers are another option to filter out sounds and background noise.

Strategy 4: Take their perspective. When children have trouble or upsetting situations occur, they may not be able to communicate what is bothering them. Teachers and mentors can think through several questions to uncover what might be wrong: What happened immediately before and right after the incident? Who else is part of the setting? Can they share insights into the person’s behavior? If the child attends school or participates in another program, ask if someone can talk to the teacher or observe the child in another setting. Learning and seeing what works well for the child in other settings increases the odds that the church can make helpful changes in the church’s environment.

Strategy 5: Make comfortable routines. Because children and adults with ASD may not be able to process everything that is happening around them, they rely on routines to provide structure. Everyone needs to feel secure and others in the church can benefit as well. For example, a printed order of worship, picture schedules (a set of pictures that illustrate the sequence of activities), and projected PowerPoint slides that highlight the current activity all work well. Including ways that the child or adult can serve and offer their gifts is a good strategy for creating meaning in the routine. Depending on the individual’s ability, they could be a greeter, hand out bulletins, light candles, help with food or table preparation, or other church activities.

Strategy 6: Use advance warning systems. Before a nurse sets up an IV, she describes to the patient what she is going to do and why and what a patient might experience. She also periodically asks how the patient is doing. Giving the patient this type of advance warning reduces anxiety and builds trust.

In the church setting, teachers can give a verbal countdown during class (“In five minutes our class will end and we’ll go to the sanctuary for worship.”); use a special clock that visually displays disappearing time; and hand parents or guardians printed information about any upcoming activity that is not usually part of the routine.

Strategy 7: Multiply communication. To reach those with limited language skills, become familiar with any electronic communication devices that they may use. Consider recruiting mentors to learn and use sign language.

Strategy 8: Use visual cues. To reinforce verbal messages, try to think in pictures. Use paper and pencil to sketch or write notes. Some children find drawing a picture of what happened or their feelings easier than verbal descriptions. Churches with strength in the arts, photography, and media are especially equipped to communicate effectively with children in worship.

Everyone is Welcome Here!

Jessica described herself to her mother: “My body has autism, but my spirit does not.” She attends a church that shares the conviction that her connection to God is not hindered by ASD. By emphasizing all that we have in common and that we all belong to God, congregations can transform children, adults, and families. “Now you are the body of Christ, and each one of you is a part of it.”

3. 1 Corinthians, 12:27.
Rosalynn Carter pointed to the universal nature of caregiving when she said that there are four kinds of people in the world: those who have been caregivers, those who are currently caregivers, those who will be caregivers, and those who will need caregivers. The church plays a unique role by helping many people realize that they are already engaged in some form of this ministry. Caring for a family member or loved one is a vocation that can be supported and celebrated by the congregation. Still, part of this support requires acknowledging that caregivers often put their own needs last and risk losing their ability to continue as caregivers.

What the Caregiver Experiences

Caregivers deal with immense personal stress, and often without much awareness of its effects. In the face of a problem or situation that cannot be fixed, feeling overwhelmed, helpless, and frustrated are common responses. Over time, isolation, loneliness, or depression can surface. All caregivers feel guilty, angry, or resentful at some point. Most caregivers express physical, emotional, financial, and spiritual concerns. Unfortunately, caregivers typically wait too long before seeking out personal medical care too.

The caregiver is also struggling with the feelings and needs of the care-receiver. Their loved one may experience physical limitations, lack of independence (such as no longer driving or an inability to care for self), poor health, and loss of the family home, church, and friends. Both the caregiver and care-receiver must try to find pathways to acceptance. This acceptance may take the form of understanding that some kind of end has occurred; grieving the loss or change; and feeling a sense of gratitude for what has ended. People fall prey to the “focusing illusion”—focusing on what is lost after a major surgery, illness, or large life change. The illusion neglects the fact that we have extraordinary capacity to adapt and enjoy a new life that is not “perfect.”

Those who care for the caregivers can help them realize that all these feelings are normal. Gently ask caregivers what they are doing to take care of their own needs. For example: How are you kind to yourself? What do you do or whom do you talk to when you are discouraged? Do you allow others to help you? What blessings have you received as a caregiver? Point them to online resources that identify the warning signs of caregiver burnout. Depending on the circumstances, consider sharing with them the Caregiver’s Bill of Rights.

Ideas for the Caregiver

Caregivers need to care for themselves in order to care for others. Starting or strengthening spiritual disciplines such as prayer, worship, meditation, Bible reading, journaling, or singing help family caregivers handle their own emotional needs. Continuing to engage in activities that bring joy such as physical exercise, hobbies, reading, or time in nature also provide some respite. Doing social things like lunch or an outing with a friend, playing with children, going to a movie or concert, or shopping for oneself give people a break from care giving. Time away generates the most benefit if caregivers start early in the care giving process.
Ideas for Church Members

Individual church members can take actions that help caregivers—offering to do grocery shopping, assisting with transportation, or staying with the family member while the caregiver takes some much-deserved personal time. Prayers, cards, phone calls, and visits always bring comfort. Finally, never underestimate the power of listening to the caregiver’s concerns.

Ideas for the Congregation

Beyond what individual, caring church members can do for caregivers, the congregation as a whole can leverage resources and coordinate efforts to support caregivers. Here are some examples of how congregations can support caregivers.

Develop a Care Team or Stephen Ministry. Congregations of every size need a care team or system for providing care to one another. Without such a team or system, some members fall through the cracks. Details on establishing a care team are in a free resource on The Parish Paper website (Church Effectiveness Nuggets # 9: How to Develop a Congregational Care Team; www.theparishpaper.com).

Thousands of congregations have trained their staff and members to be Stephen Ministers, a way to provide one-on-one confidential Christian care. This nonprofit organization (www.stephenministries.org) offers training to equip local trainers, who in turn train others, who offer care and support to people in the congregation or community. After completing the training, a Stephen Minister is assigned to a care-receiver, who they visit once a week. Participants who complete the training report that the skills they learned were useful in many other settings where caring ministry was needed.

Start a caregiver support group. A staff person or member organizes a group of people who share the common situation of care giving. The group provides nonjudgmental support, and helps participants deal with emotions that accompany the role of caregiver. The group can also be a place to hear about community and governmental resources that could assist in the care of the family member. The group coordinator or convener should not currently be a caregiver and should encourage the full participation of the group members in choosing meeting times, topics, and guest speakers.

Coordinate a prayer shawl ministry. Some congregations gather a group of people who love knitting or crocheting to make shawls. Those who make a shawl offer prayers and blessings for a caregiver or their loved one. More information about this ministry is available at www.shawlministry.com

Offer workshops, lectures, or series about care giving. Caregivers and members who want to support them benefit from additional information about particular illnesses, conditions, technologies, and other topics related to caring for loved ones. Presentations could range from a single session on Alzheimer’s disease to a series on multiple topics related to community resources. Many local social service agencies are willing to send a speaker for such a program.

Create a resource directory. Compiling a directory of local organizations or services (such as Adult Day Care, respite care) is a time-saver for caregivers. The directory can also assist members who wish to make contacts on behalf of the family.

Share weekly worship services. If worship services are recorded or streamed on the internet, find out if families who can no longer attend services are interested in the opportunity to worship weekly.

Hold services of prayer and healing. Many congregations prepare special worship experiences several times a year where time is devoted to prayers for healing. Making extra efforts to invite and include caregivers in these services is greatly appreciated.

Organize additional outreach at Christmas, Easter, and during other religious seasons. Holidays and other busy times stress the already overwhelmed caregiver. Conversations with caregivers and their families can reveal ways that the congregation could be part of making rituals surrounding holidays more meaningful and less stressful.

Who Cares?

When we offer sympathy, empathy, compassion, concern, or the willingness to listen, we show our care and love. In Matthew 19:19, Jesus said, “You shall love your neighbor as yourself.” The young lawyer who pressed for the details heard the story of The Good Samaritan. Jesus’ story of compassion illustrates how we can overlook the one who cares unselfishly for another.
