Notes on the Unpublished Song Cycles of Louis Durey

To date, very little has been written in English about the noteworthy French composer Louis Durey (1888-1979). While Durey was a member of Les Six during the group’s earliest associations, his distancing from the other composers coincided with Jean Cocteau’s self-appointment as the porte-parole for the group. Consequently, little is known about this composer who embodies not only the ideals of Les Six, but whose music reflects all that was important during this époque.

Aside from Frédéric Robert’s book and a recording with liner notes by Graham Johnson and François Le Roux, very little has been published by or about Durey. With this in mind, I traveled to Paris in October to meet with Durey’s daughter, Arlette Durey. Through my conversations with her, I have been able to gather information on two fronts. The first is her recollections of her father, providing fresh insight into the man about which very little is known. The second is Mme. Durey’s gracious offer to send me copies of the many original manuscripts of song cycles that have not yet been published.

My thesis will therefore be a discussion of the life and unpublished song cycles of Louis Durey. My paper will constitute an addendum to the performance or listening experience of Durey’s music. I will focus on the following unpublished and unrecorded works: Trois Poèmes de Verlaine – 1914; L’Offrande Lyrique (Rabindranath Tagore) – 1914; Le Voyage d’Urien (André Gide) – 1916. I will discuss how, above all, Durey’s works are characterized by lyricism and a tendency towards homophony. I will explore how Durey’s works, perhaps ironically, characterize the spirit of Les Six as outlined by Jean Cocteau in his text Coq et Arlequin.

These works shall be discussed within a context of the music of the period, as well as some of Durey’s better-known, published works. As the manuscripts continue to arrive, I may include a discussion of other unpublished song cycles: 6 madrigaux de Mallarmé, 3 poèmes de Paul Valéry, Cantate de la prison (G. Apollinaire), 4 stances de Moréas, 4 poèmes de minuit (G. Audisio), Grève de la faim (N. Hikmet), Une femme du sud chante (L. Hughes), 3 poèmes de Paul Eluard, Cantate de la rose et de l’amour (L. Ernié), Le dit du petit garçon Khoa (Tran Dang Khoa).
