UPFOR continues an impressive run of new-media art programming with Jeremy Rotsztain's digital prints and software-generated animations. Using computer algorithms to create faux "brushstrokes," the artist layers myriad ribbons of color, which he distorts through digital tricks that mimic Cartesian grids, parallax errors and false perspective. But do his animations and prints rise above the novelty of their high-tech method and present new media in a way that's not trite or cheesy? Check this space next week for a capsule review. Feb. 5-28.
