Dear Friends of Boyle Heights,

On behalf of the entire Board of Directors and membership of the Boyle Heights Chamber of Commerce (BHCC), we are pleased to present to you the Boyle Heights Business Directory. This directory is a comprehensive listing of the business and services that comprise the Boyle Heights community.

Founded over 150 years ago, Boyle Heights is a culturally rich cornerstone of the Los Angeles landscape. The Boyle Heights area has been home to many immigrant communities over its proud history, and stands today as a living testament to the dynamic sights, sounds and smells of its unique culture. A cultural kaleidoscope, Boyle Heights is rich with the vibrant colors from its local artists, the joyful sounds of classical mariachis, and the aromatic smells of the some of the best, authentic Mexican dishes in all of Southern California.

The Boyle Heights Chamber of Commerce has been proudly serving the Boyle Heights community since its founding in 1979. Today it serves as a strong advocate for the local businesses and the welfare of the general community offering educational resources and supporting community events, while simultaneously fostering key relationships between government and private business. This business directory is an example of the value-added services the chamber seeks to provide for its members and the community.

We invite you to peruse this directory and learn more about all that the Boyle Heights area has to offer. We hope you will consider becoming a part of the Boyle Heights Chamber, and will support the businesses, service companies, artists, and community-based organizations that are the spirit and backbone of this truly remarkable community.

We would also like to thank the many sponsors and board members for their support and contributions to this directory, and a special thank you to Ralph Carmona and Rafael Cardenas for their relentless effort to produce this publication.

JOSE HUIZAR
COUNCILMEMBER, 14TH DISTRICT

Dear Neighbor,

I am thrilled to serve as your City Councilmember and to witness yet another great year of improvements in the Boyle Heights community. I am proud to work closely with the Boyle Heights Chamber of Commerce as we collaborate on improving business opportunities and services for all those who live, work and play in Boyle Heights.

It is an exciting time for Boyle Heights with nearly $2 billion in improvements in recent years, including a wide array of services, such as the Gold Line Eastside Extension, Mendez Learning Center (the first high school built in Boyle Heights in more than 80 years), a new Hollenbeck Police Station and many upgrades to our local parks and schools.

We also expect great projects to unfold in the not-too-distant future. Cesar Chavez Avenue and 1st Street will both see major public right of way improvements, including new sidewalks, new sidewalk-friendly trees, additional lighting and street furniture. As a Councilmember and a Metro Board Director, I am proud to work on implementing these critical and necessary infrastructure improvements, which will make our corridors more pedestrian-friendly, safe and beautiful.

The improvements on 1st Street will also support my efforts to create an Arts District along the 1st Street Corridor. Establishing an Arts District on 1st Street will enhance the burgeoning arts spaces and uses there now, including Casa 0101's new, state-of-the-art community theater and the recently arrived Self Help Graphics arts center. An Arts District will not only nurture the vast creative talent that exists in Boyle Heights, but will improve business and services along 1st Street.

In addition to working to improve our business corridors in Boyle Heights, my field office is available to serve the Boyle Heights community with general issues, such as pothole repairs, bulky-item and graffiti removal and many other concerns. Should you have any community-related questions or concerns, please feel free to contact my Boyle Heights Field Office at (323) 526-3059.

Thank you for working with me to make Boyle Heights a better community and thank you for the honor of serving you.

Sincerely,

José Huizar
Councilmember, 14th District

OUR HERITAGE, OUR BOYLE HEIGHTS

BY GEORGE J. SANCHEZ, UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

What is most significant about Boyle Heights is how the community's heritage and history captures what we all want most out of living in a dynamic urban neighborhood: meaningful interaction with individuals from all backgrounds and walks of life, caring about a common place that can serve as both a safe home for all and a launching pad for success in the future. All audiences search for a Los Angeles in the past and hope for one in the future in which individuals of different races and nations live and work side-by-side in harmony, even if they must struggle for survival together.

I've discovered that the people who first populated the urban settlement of Boyle Heights, be they the Russian Molokans of the Flats region, the Mexican railroad workers, the Japanese professionals whose businesses dotted First Street, or the Jewish laborers who centered L.A.'s union movement at Brooklyn and Soto, all came to Boyle Heights in the early twentieth century because they saw the neighborhood as a place of opportunity, close to industrial employment but with a welcoming environment for all. Indeed, at that time, most of these individuals were not allowed to rent or buy property in other parts of Los Angeles, since the city was a national leader in racially restrictive covenants excluding them. In Boyle Heights, they constructed new institutions to meet their needs, be they religious houses of worship, community centers, or labor unions. And of course, many graduates remember Roosevelt High School as a "multiethnic utopia" where 61 different nationalities went to school.

Living through the Great Depression of the 1930s and World War II of the 1940s pushed the community closer together, but also made clear to families that they could not be isolated from the traumas affecting the world around them. Mexican families living in the Flats who were targeted for deportation and repatriation in the early years of the Depression, left homes they were often renting from Russian Molokan and other families, who subsequently lost their properties when city officials targeted these areas for freeway and public housing construction. But this era also produced community cooperation as residents bartered food from each other to survive the economic collapse of the 1930s. And when war came to Boyle Heights, many families served their neighbors even as their children served in the military. Unlike the situation in many other communities, trusted neighbors of different ethnic backgrounds took care of Japanese-owned homes and businesses for the duration of World War II in order to make sure that their rightful owners had them to return to at the end of the internment experience.

Courage under fire and broad understanding of democratic rights seems to mark the most successful political and social leaders which emerged from Boyle Heights. Edward Roybal, the first Mexican American elected to the Los Angeles City Council from this district in 1949, was the first multiracial politician in modern Los Angeles because he formed a truly multiracial coalition to win elections and serve the community throughout his tenure on the city council until 1962. Roybal became the champion for the underdog during his time on the city council, being acclaimed by the ACLU for his willingness to stand up against the local forces of McCarthyism, as well as the NAACP for his fight for fair employment and housing in his district and throughout the city.

The spirit of community activism and neighborhood improvement continued even as Mexican newcomers replaced the Jews and Japanese leaving the neighborhood. Victoria Castro was not only a Roosevelt student leader fighting for improved conditions for advancement of all students in the 1968 Walkouts; she would go on to serve on the L.A. School Board and as principal of Hollenbeck Middle School. The number of Jewish and Japanese former Roosevelt students who went back into the community to teach a largely Latino student body is an important part of the educational history of the neighborhood, and many, such as our current Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa, credit these individuals in helping them launch their careers of service and accomplishment.

Today is another period of transition and potential change for Boyle Heights, brought about by the completion of the Gold Line into the neighborhood, the transformation of several housing developments, and the possibility of extensive gentrification that may make it more difficult for long term residents to stay in the community they love. While change should not be feared, the spirit of community democracy which has consistently prevailed in Boyle Heights should be front and center in all discussions about how the community can move forward in the future. Our visions of the multiracial past of Boyle Heights will continue to influence new generations of Angelinos whose vision of the future of the city includes new multiracial realities.

THE FIRST STREET CORRIDOR

When playwright Josefina Lopez opened a small theater in Boyle Heights, she hoped her space could become the heart of an arts district in the neighborhood where she grew up.

"I wanted to create my own opportunities. I had no money and no plans but I wanted to do it. I was such an idealist," Lopez said of her plans to open a theater. "Our community deserved a space for its artists and a place to celebrate our stories and history."

Eleven years ago, Lopez took her University of California, Los Angeles' student loans and used them to build and open Casa 0101 Theater. It's a 1,000 square foot theater that fits 55 people. In the single room theater, Lopez has produced dozens of plays.

Now her vision is becoming a reality.

"We (Casa 0101) are the anchor for the arts district," she said of the improvements on First Street, which she refers to as Boyle Heights' Arts District. "It's not officially recognized yet but there's a lot of excitement for the possibilities."

In the last few years, Los Angeles has invested $1.6 billion for public improvement projects in Boyle Heights – the biggest bulk of the money went to First Street, said Councilmember Jose Huizar.

The improvements include the Gold Line expansion, a $900 million project, the new police station, improvements to the library, parks and a new school – The Mendez Learning Center, Huizar said.

The unofficial arts district, which runs from Mariachi Plaza to the new Los Angeles Police Department Station, has revitalized First Street.

Aside from CASA 0101, new galleries and businesses have opened including, Corazon del Pueblo, Urban Sanctuary, Libros Schimbros and Self Help Graphics, which moved from Cesar Chavez Avenue.

"It is a well-respected arts center with years of history, Self Help Graphics is going to be a big part of creating a distinctive Boyle Heights Arts District," Huizar said in a written statement.

The arts district has also brought new opportunities for economic development for Boyle Heights.

New businesses have opened, including restaurants, coffee shops, bars, and even a weekly farmer's market.

Juan Romero, owner of Primera Taza Coffee House, helped fund the Boyle Heights Farmer's Market, which celebrated its first anniversary in July of 2011.

"We have been able to create a social place for people to eat healthy, feel safe and listen to some great entertainment every Friday," Romero said.

Romero said he saw the importance of bringing fresh produce to the community.

He opened his coffee shop March 2009 because there were no quality cafés or social places to gather in the area. With the help of a friend, the owner of a coffee shop in El Sereno, he was able to open Primera Taza. Romero has also allowed his business to become a haven for up and coming artists by allowing them to display their art in his establishment.

For Romero, having a small business in Boyle Heights is more personal than just making money. It is also about improving the neighborhood where he grew up, he said.

Lopez agrees.

"When I was growing up there was nothing to do here," she said. "I would always go to City Walk or other parts of the city."

She said she was disappointed not to be able to spend her money in the community that she knew and loved.

"All the money I spent went outside my community," she said. "It's different now. People can come see a show at CASA and grab dinner and go out for a drink afterward."

The improvements are far from over.

Huizar said the city is planning to invest another $15 million in creating a small civic center at the intersection of First and Chicago Streets. The center would include the police station and renovations to the park, library and Boyle Heights City Hall, which would serve as a one-stop location for residents looking for city services without having to go downtown.

Making more improvements to First Street, such as putting new pavement to sidewalks and opening up bicycle lane, will help to create the Arts District, Huizar said.

"All these improvements will increase foot traffic, which supports business, the Arts District, as well as increases ridership on the Metro Gold Line," he said. "So it will be a good thing for everybody."

Another improvement in the works are the sidewalks near the Chavez Commercial Corridor that will be replaced, making them wider and more walker-friendly, Huizar said.

CASA 0101 Theater has also experienced positive changes this year by moving to a new space – more than four times its original size.

The new theater, located 2102 East First Street, is 5,400 square feet and will be able to fit 99 people. Also, the theater will have a separate rehearsal room, an art gallery, offices, dressing rooms and a backstage area.

"We are going to have more shows and a bigger audience," she said. "We will also be able to have bigger classrooms and more room to have parties and celebrate Boyle Heights."

And after a year of providing fresh produce and entertainment to residents, the Boyle Heights Farmer's Market continues to grow.

"We're looking forward to expanding the market with new partnerships with White Memorial Hospital to handle the health aspect by accepting EBT and enroll low-income families," Romero said.

The goal, he explains, is to make fresh fruits and vegetables affordable to low-income families, who don't have a grocery store near-by.

Given all the projects, Councilmember Huizar said, Boyle Heights' future looks bright.

"There is a lot going on here, in part because Boyle Heights is one of the City's oldest suburbs and has an aging infrastructure. Quite frankly, it was neglected for many years," Huizar said. "But we are changing that in big and small ways and I think it bodes well for Boyle Heights and those who do business here. The future looks extremely bright."

BH: A FOODIE DESTINATION

BY JESSICA PEREZ

There was a time when restaurants and delis in Boyle Heights were backed up with orders of pickled herring and corned beef on rye. Mothers hand picked live chickens to cook for supper and others enjoyed rugalach at the numerous Jewish bakeries on Brooklyn Avenue.

Today, you won't find much rye bread in the neighborhood. Instead the aroma of tacos, quesadillas and elotes from local eateries and street vendors reflect the community's mostly Latino demographics.

It's no secret you can get some of the best eats in Boyle Heights, and at great prices too. The food here is the pride of the locals and an attraction for the Angelino foodie. Some of the most popular dishes, mostly masa-based snacks referred to as Mexican antojitos, are what keep bloggers and yelpers busy.

"Everyone comes here for the food. It has that Mexican authenticity and it's hard to compare it to any other neighborhood," said Ramon Galan, who drives nearly 20 miles from the city of Whittier for food joints on Cesar Chavez Avenue.

Taquerias are abundant here, but that doesn't mean there isn't room for one more. The recent opening of Guisados has created a buzz in Los Angeles, introducing clientele to the home-style stews and braises such as calabasitas and chicharon slathered on hand made corn tortillas.

For a more traditional taco, the iconic King Taco restaurant still draws lunch lines out the door and Carnitas Michoacan (24 Hours) usually satisfies a late night crowd.

Reviews on local newspapers and web sites also credit Boyle Heights with a vibrant street food culture. Carmen Ortega knows all about this. She began selling her Mexican delicacies, including her famous huarache de huitlacoche, out of a cart on the streets of Boyle Heights in the 1980s, but early in 2010, she opened Antojitos Carmen—a restaurant reviewed by highly-recognized food critic Jonathan Gold for a July article in the LA Weekly.

"Other L.A. restaurants began as street food — Pink's as a hot dog cart, Guelaguetza as a corner tamale operation — but none quite so vividly as Antojitos Carmen, which still has both its boots on the avenue. You want these guys to succeed." -Jonathan Gold, LA Weekly

But not all food in Boyle Heights comes wrapped in masa. A number of restaurants offering alternatives have maintained their clientele for decades. After Johnny's Shrimp Boat moved into the neighborhood from it's original Downtown L.A. location, customers followed the shrimp, rice, beans and gravy. And although the area has not seen a high concentration of Japanese Americans since before World War II, Japanese restaurant Otomisan has been in business since 1956—when it opened as Otomi Cafe. Now in its third owner, the restaurant serves sushi rolls, rice bowls and udon noodle soups to customers of all ancestry.

"The old restaurants are the best. I continue to visit them after my parents introduced me as a kid," said Art Lopez who grew up in Boyle Heights and now resides in Palmdale, Calif.

Whether you look for the credibility of a long-standing business like El Tepeyac or Al and Beas; you value the home-style cooking of Yeyas, La Santa Cecilia, or Chispa de Oro; or you enjoy the convenience of delivery from Purgatory Pizza, it's not hard to find a gem in Boyle Heights. Foodies may not agree on a favorite for lunch, but at least they can be satisfied with knowing there's always dinner.

Find these and many more restaurants listed under food in the directory section.

BH: A CULTURAL DESTINATION

BY JESSICA PEREZ

Two miles east of Downtown L.A.'s Gallery Row, a collection of art spaces have found a home in Boyle Heights. Theatres, dance studios, music venues and art galleries make up a vibrant community, rich in history and culture. Although a designated arts district along the First Street corridor is still in the works, community members and visitors don't hold their breath for a city-appointed sign. In recent years, local artists have embarked on projects that support various forms of art, birthing gathering places for artistic expression.

"The era that we're in is kind of an artistic move, some kind of a revival of community," said photographer and Boyle Heights resident Eddie Rualcaba.

Art is nothing new in this neighborhood. Murals have been a staple around here for decades. But today, art is largely present indoors as well. A number of business and organizations along First Street now host arts programming and events, making Boyle Heights a must-see cultural arts destination.

Here's a list of places to explore in the neighborhood:

1. Self Help Graphics and Art

In the 1970s, Karen Boccalero, a Franciscan nun opened the art space out of a garage before moving to its signature mosaic building on Cesar Chavez Avenue in East Los Angeles. Now a nationally recognized art institution, SHG moved to Boyle Heights in April 2011, continuing to promote emerging Chicano/a artists and offering diverse art workshops, exhibits and cultural events.

2. Un Solo Sol Kitchen

Here, vegetarian popusas are paired with a healthy dose of art. Engineer and community arts advocate Carlos Ortez opened this tiny restaurant in 2009. Acoustic musical performances, flamenco dinner shows and rotating art exhibits are all part of the menu, creating incentives for first-time patrons to try the eclectic cuisine: a healthy approach to Latin American and other world dishes.

3. Eastside Luv Wine y Queso Bar

Whether you go for the burlesque, the themed kara"OKE" nights, or the famous "cheladitos"

(one of their signature drinks), make sure you catch a glimpse of the monthly flow of artwork displayed against a backdrop of red velvet walls. Visitors might call it a hidden gem, attracted by its hybrid of Mexican and East L.A. chic, but for locals, it's simply "ESL:" a place where "pocho" culture is celebrated and Spanglish is embraced.

4. Primera Taza Coffee House

"Meet me at Primera Taza" is what the locals say around town. The concept of a coffee shop is nothing new, but for many years in Boyle Heights, this was close to a novelty. Today, Primera Taza is a hang out spot for students, artists and nearby professionals who enjoy a cup of coffee as much as the art exhibits, comedy and poetry nights hosted at the shop and at its multi-use community storefront next door.

5. Corazon Del Pueblo

Formerly Brooklyn and Boyle Gallery, this cultural, arts and education collective aims to bring artists, activists, students and lovers of all things creative. A blend of incense and poetry floats out of the popular open-mic nights open to anyone willing to spit a word or two. Art canvases sit quietly on the walls during educational workshops and yoga sessions, but come alive with echoes of cumbia, son jarocho and hip-hop at the center's frequent "pachangas."

6. CASA 0101 Theatre

When CASA0101 opened in 2000, a wave of interest in the stage turned the ordinaries into actors and the curious into audiences. Over the years, they've produced a number of plays ranging from professional to student productions and have hosted art exhibits, film screenings, and creative writing and acting classes. The tiny 50-seat theater was founded by playwright Josefina Lopez, Real Women Have Curves, but this year, CASA opens its new cultural arts center across the street, doubling its space but maintaining its goal of nurturing Latino artists.

7. Soul Skating

Conveniently located a couple of blocks away from Hollenbeck Park's Skate Plaza, Soul Skating serves both as a skate shop and a community art space. Owner and Boyle Heights native Armando Gonzalez wished to bring all that encompassed the skate culture through merchandise sales, art exhibits, workshops and live musical performances, attracting both skaters and art enthusiasts.

8. Tierra Blanca Arts Center at Salon de la Plaza

On the second floor, above the Council District 14 office, sits Salon De La Plaza Banquet Hall, the new home of Tierra Blanca Arts Center. Although the organization is recognized for their education in Latin American and other ethnic folk dance, other art classes and events also make up their programming, open to children and adults.

9. Casa de La Cultura de Mexico Inc. Gallery

Nestled behind the Metro Gold line station, where a large kiosk stands and musicians congregate, this tiny gallery at Mariachi Plaza may sometimes go under the radar. Mostly open evenings, Casa de la Cultura hosts art exhibits and workshops and acts as an office for the non-profit organization.

10. Urban Sanctuary Gallery

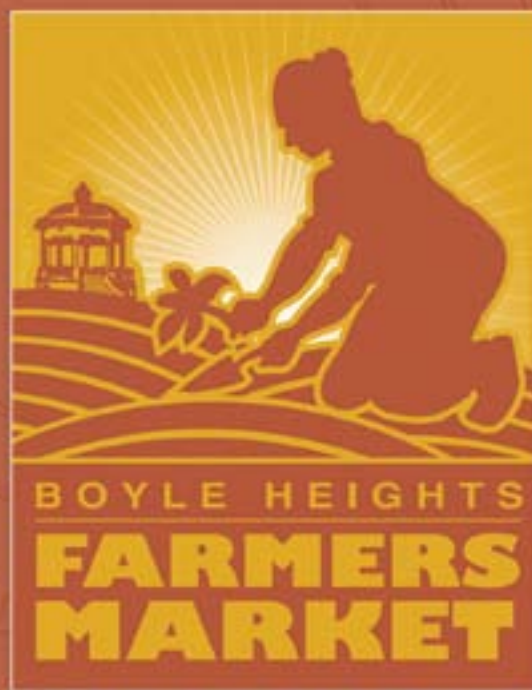

A nearby bookstore, a popular burrito spot, and multiple cultural art centers surround this gallery, which formerly housed First Street Studios. Artwork by neighborhood native Erin Yoshi covers the outside, but inside, art studios will soon be transformed into spas. The space will still host regular art exhibits.

11. Casa del Mexicano

One of the neighborhood's oldest buildings was born a Methodist church and may have been Jewish synagogue, but today, it's a cultural landmark that celebrates Mexican heritage. Here, you can enjoy lucha libre, theater, folk dance, beauty pageants, and a variety of workshops for the community; or simply come gawk at the elaborate array of murals inside the dome-shaped building, painted by Mexican artist Hugo Martinez Tecoaatl.

12. Mbar

This bar has stood on the First Street Corridor for over 15 years, but under new management, a recent renovation coupled with its support of the arts movement, this place has transformed its image and purpose. Music and dancing is what's hot here, but occasionally, you can catch an art reception, a poetry affair, or a group of artists gathered for a fundraising event.
