Location

Situated on the Dalmatian coast (in the very south of Croatia, near Bosnia-Herzegovina and Montenegro), Dubrovnik is often referred to as the “Pearl of the Adriatic”. The city is in the same time the Centre of Dubrovnik-Neretva County as well as a Mediterranean seaport. Back in the Middle Ages, It developed and was built on maritime trade. Ragusa (it’s Latin name) was long, the only rival to Venice in the Adriatic. Surviving exclusively on trade, Dubrovnik managed for centuries to remain an independent Republic, which neither fell in the hands of the Ottomans nor under the influence of the Austrian Empire. Throughout the centuries, this cradle for many poets, playwrights, painters, scientist has been a centre playing a part in the development of language, literature and culture. Its architecture - houses, fountains, churches, monasteries, and specific sculptural details, sheltered by its famous city walls and forts - remains witnessing these flourishing times. The city is nowadays part of the UNESCO World Heritage. It has been chosen to be the stage for renowned movie productions and is a highly valued Croatian destination.
