Campus Martius Park

Stand at: Point of Origin marker on the sidewalk in front of Fountain Bistro | Built: 2004

Have you ever wondered what Eight Mile Road is eight miles from? The answer is right here – the point of origin! It was after the great fire in 1805 that Augustus Woodward laid out a plan for Detroit based on the plans for Paris and Washington D.C. The name comes from its historical use as a military training ground and gathering place. Today, Campus Martius is a place where locals and visitors listen to free concerts during the summer, go ice skating in the winter, or pick up something good to eat at Fountain Bistro.

The Guardian Building

Stand at: Corner of Griswold and Congress, facing 500 Griswold | Built: 1929 | Architect: Wirt Rowland

The Guardian Building is unlike any other building, and was built for the Union Trust Company to be a “Cathedral of Finance”. The architect’s choice of a combination Art Deco, Aztec and Native American influences as well as Detroit’s own Pewabic Pottery tile, has an immediate impact on the passerby. Inside the Guardian Building is a must-see elaborate lobby where you’ll find Pure Detroit and the Rowland and Stella Cafes.

One Woodward Avenue

Stand at: Northwest corner of Woodward and Jefferson facing north | Built: 1963

Architect: Minoru Yamasaki

One Woodward Avenue was one of Yamazaki’s first skyscraper projects and it helped him formulate his design for the World Trade Center, which began construction just three years later. The views from the interior are some of the best in the city because the floor-to-ceiling windows seem never-ending. The large cube at the top is illuminated at night in varying hues as a final crowning detail to the building’s simplicity.

Spirit of Detroit

The Spirit of Detroit statue was created “to express the spirit of man through the deity and the family.” Above the Spirit of Detroit you will see the City seal on the left and the County seal on the right. The City seal depicts two women with flames behind them representing the fire of 1805. The text shown is a Latin phrase “Speramus Meliora Resurget Cineribus” which is the city’s motto and translates to “We hope for better things. It will arise from the ashes.”

Hart Plaza

Stand at: Southwest corner of Woodward and Jefferson | Completed: 1975

The 64-acre Hart Plaza is named for the late Senator Philip Hart and can hold more than 40,000 people. It is host to many annual festivals such as Movement (Electronic Music Festival) and the Jazz Fest. The 83 foot steel arch on the north end is called Transcending and is the Michigan Labor Legacy Landmark. The Horace E. Dodge and Son Memorial Fountain stands in the center of the Plaza and was designed by famed sculptor Isamu Noguchi in 1978.

The Riverfront

Stand at: The RiverWalk at the base of the stairs

The Detroit River is about 32 miles long and links Lake St. Clair and Lake Erie. It was here that Antoine de Lamothe Cadillac landed in 1701 and built Fort Ponchartrain du Detroit. The beautiful sculpture you see is called Gateway to Freedom and it honors Detroit’s major role in the Underground Railroad. The riverfront has recently been developed as a leisure destination in the form of Detroit’s new RiverWalk.

The Renaissance Center

Stand at: Corner of Randolph and Jefferson | Built: 1977

The Renaissance Center is Detroit’s most recognizable building and Michigan’s tallest. When completed it was the tallest all-hotel skyscraper in the world at 73 stories. Today the Marriott is still one of the tallest hotels in the Western Hemisphere. The building currently serves as GM World Headquarters. It also includes 70 stores, restaurants and services, including a 4-screen movie theater. If you have the time there are free daily tours of the Renaissance Center.

Greektown

Stand at: Corner of Monroe and Beaubien

Greektown is one of the anchors of Detroit’s entertainment culture and offers a casino and dozens of bar and restaurant options. A trip to Detroit isn’t complete without trying the Greek appetizer, Saganaki – a special fried cheese that is flambéed right at your table. An important historical spot in Greektown though, it was originally settled by the Germans!

Z Garage & Belt Murals

Stand at: Southwest corner of Grand River and Broadway

“Z” parking garage is quite possibly the coolest parking garage in the world. It is a 10-floor, 535,000-square-foot space that zigzags from the corner of Broadway and East Grand River to the corner of Library and Grota in downtown Detroit and includes original works from 27 international street artists. The Belt (the alley between the two sections) features murals by more than a dozen local, national and international artists. The Belt also offers a space for pop up art exhibitions and events with food trucks and live music. Both the Z and the Belt were curated by the Library Street Collective, an amazing gallery located just around the corner.

Harmonie Park / Paradise Valley

Stand at: The intersection of Grand River Avenue and Center Street

Harmonie Park is an entertainment destination of its own and was originally home of the German singing organization, the Harmonie Club. It has recently been renamed to honor the historic African-American neighborhood which was organized when the freeway was added. Paradise Valley is now home to many restaurants, shops and the Arts League of Michigan which helps program great music and events in the recently renovated Beatrix Buck Park.

The Theater District

Stand at: Corner of Broadway and Witherell

If it’s theater that you like, you are within walking distance of several theaters that combine to house more than 13,000 theaters seats, making it the second largest theater district in the U.S. The Detroit Opera House, here at the corner, was built as a movie palace called the Capitol Theater in 1922. Just north on Woodward is “Fabulous” Fox Theater, which was built in 1928 to be one of the world’s most beautiful movie palaces, and succeeded. It seats over 5,000 people. Just south of the Fox Theater is the Fillmore Theater which was built in 1975 by C. Howard Crane, who also designed the Opera House and the Fox Theater. Though not as grand as the Fox, it is still magnificent and is used for rock concerts and special events.

Grand Circus Park

Stand at: Corner of Woodward and Witherell

Comerica Park to the northeast has been home to the Detroit Tigers since 2000; Ford Field has been home to the Detroit Lions since 2002, and it hosted Super Bowl XL in 2006. The Broderick Tower at Woodward and Witherell was designed by Louis Kamper in 1928 and the David Whitney Building across the street, designed by Howard Crane, who also designed the Opera House and the Fox Theater. Though not as grand as the Fox, it is still magnificent and is used for rock concerts and special events.
