SOLVING ORGANIZATIONAL PROBLEMS
THROUGH LEADERSHIP & MINDSET

David Moss

Senior Consultant, Arbinger Institute

Organizational problems, including poor leadership, functional silos, and interpersonal conflict, are deeply rooted within the culture of an institution. While surface changes can be marginally effective, truly improving departmental performance and organizational results requires a complete and sustainable transformation of culture that directly addresses the underlying elements of the problem. Please join us for an introduction, or refresher, to Arbinger's work that teaches participants about the dramatic effects of both Inward and Outward Mindsets.

In this workshop, participants will begin to gain an understanding about their own contributions to the problems and frustrations that they blame on others. With an ability to recognize Outward and Inward Mindsets, participants are equipped with foundational tools necessary to shift toward an Outward Mindset and begin to see how to invite others to do the same. This course establishes a foundation of awareness, understanding, and a deeper level of accountability and invites participants to work toward a deep cultural shift within the organization.

Whether you're familiar with Arbinger's work or not, whether you're a licensed facilitator or not, whether you've attended or are scheduled to attend a two-day or four-hour Arbinger workshop or not, don't miss this special engagement. We encourage leaders, elected and other, to attend. This workshop is a must do.
