

Kunsthalle Galapagos presents:

No Blue Skies
by Eric LoPresti

February 7th - March 10th, 2013

Opening Reception: Thursday, February 7th, 2013 7pm - 10pm

Kunsthalle Galapagos proudly opens No Blue Skies, a solo exhibition of new work by Eric LoPresti, on February 7, 2013 from 7 - 10pm.

Eric LoPresti's landscapes are investigations into the "apocalyptic sublime." Whether rendering nuclear test sites, aerial views of the scarred desert of eastern Washington State where he grew up, or ominous undisclosed explosions across a region's expanse, LoPresti's environments are ones of man-made disruption. In his new paintings, LoPresti continues his use of the color field gradient to represent another landscape in transition. Featuring a 15-foot canvas of an ominous dust cloud, No Blue Skies presents the terrifying, exhilarating moment when the shock of circumstance blinds us to both past and future.

Based in spirit on the collaborative and experimental kunsthalle model found in Europe, Kunsthalle Galapagos is run and curated by a group of volunteer artists and curators. We strive to be a multi-disciplinary artist-centric space that exhibits new visually and intellectually engaging work, while providing artists the opportunity to create outside the boundaries of commercial concerns. We showcase emerging and established artists, both local and international, who actively challenge convention.
