What We're Dreaming of Right Now: Fiji's Newest All-Inclusive Resort

February 7th, 2014

An all-inclusive on a private island in Fiji? This is the stuff Islands editors dream of.

The all-new Remote Resort may be, well, remote, but at this four-villa resort, the only extra mile you'll be thinking about is when you describe the service.

Here's why: The staff makes sure pampering and privacy are equally indulged. Carefully crafted cocktails made from the morning's fresh-fruit picks are great. Enjoying them on a private cove of white sand? Even better. Foodies will love chef Saveen's seafood picks – lobster, trevally, prawns – enjoyed, of course, by candlelight on your private villa porch.

But this all-inclusive captures more than just luxury. Local flair and traditional Fijian ceremonies (complete with kava, a drink made from a plant that's got nothin' on cannabis) keep the experience authentic, while surprises like the open-air bathroom carved into volcanic rock and your own plunge pool max out the wow factor.

And if you do make it out of your private plunge pool (trust us, it'll be tough with that panoramic ocean view), you've got a long list of places to explore – think untouched waterfalls, Fijian villages, and oh yeah, the famous Rainbow Reef, a soft-coral paradise that will make snorkeling your new favorite hobby and the Remote Resort your new favorite place. – Cami Webb
