| Food          | • Farmers have access to “good” seeds and are able to yield better crops
                    • New farming techniques yield more food for the community                                                                  |
| Gender Equality | • Women work as community development coordinators
                           • Girls are able to attend school and go on to university via scholarship opportunities
                           • Women are given loans to form business cooperatives                                                                 |
| Water & Energy | • Installation of foot-operated drip taps to provide households with clean water and improve sanitation
                           • Improved power and connectivity infrastructure                                                                               |
| Environment   | • Improved toilets and sanitation
                           • Plastic bags were banned in Rwanda in 2006                                                                                   |
| Technology & Innovation | • Technology in the classroom
                                         • New methods of farming                                                                                                      |
| Education     | • Business cooperatives create economic opportunities so that women can afford to pay for their children’s education.
                           • School-age children are able to attend school
                           • Schools provide lunches for students in Mayange, which helps sustain their focus.                                              |
| Maternal Health | • Community Development Coordinators educate and instruct local families                                                                 |
| Business & Entrepreneurship | • Women-created cooperatives such as basket weaving generate ongoing income.
                                         • Women receive loans and training so they are able to start their own businesses such as growing crops and raising livestock. |
