What's the label on your shirt? Who's the athlete on your shoes? What side of town is your family from? Why do these questions matter?

Our lives are under constant assault; bombarded with questions of identity and self-worth. Our time is spent in pursuits that have no ultimate meaning, cause no growth and create no further development. As a result, we spend our lives perpetuating stereotypes and societal norms, when we can instead engage the places that move us and our culture forward.

In a world full of “stuff”, we are more concerned with what our possessions are made of instead of what we are made of ourselves. In this workshop Johan engages these questions: what is the stuff we are made of and why is that the only thing that matters?
