I often marvel at how profoundly altered my life would be had I not happened upon the Hinckley Institute in 1988. Despite its small staff and even smaller office space, the Hinckley Institute fundamentally shaped my academic and career path. Not only did it empower me with five exceptional internships, scores of transformative forums, and invaluable contacts, its staff also attentively guided me toward securing the Truman Scholarship. It is no exaggeration to state that I do not believe any other undergraduate entity—Ivy League or otherwise—could have better equipped me for law school and my subsequent legal, consulting, and academic career.

Accordingly, as director of the Hinckley Institute, my overarching goal is to extend its singular opportunities to more students. Eight years have passed, and I am delighted to report that the Institute is currently growing at a pace and scale that have exceeded even my expectations. For example, when I assumed the Hinckley directorship, I hoped to increase our average of 30 Hinckley Forums per year to 50. I never imagined that we would soon host more than 100 world-class speakers and panels spanning the fall and spring semesters—or that our guests would range from pioneering scientists to celebrated ambassadors. I would have, likewise, been awed to find our calendar book-ended by two remarkable annual events: the Siciliano Forum—a week-long symposium during which dozens of experts engage on a single topic—and the Sam Rich Lecture Series, in which a preeminent leader is flown to Salt Lake for a major address.

This year’s inaugural Sam Rich Lecture featured the phenomenal, international bestselling author Malcolm Gladwell. Dubbed by Time magazine as “one of the 100 most influential people” in the world and by Foreign Policy as a leading “top global thinker,” Gladwell discussed the advantages of disadvantages in a sold-out event at Abravanel Hall.

Gladwell’s findings confirmed my belief that it is far better for undergraduates to be a “big fish” within the University of Utah and Hinckley Institute than a “little fish” at an Ivy League school. Why? Our motivated students have dozens more opportunities to acquire prestigious internships, think tanks, and scholarships than those vying against intensely competitive cohorts. The result is that Hinckley Institute student resumes frequently exceed those of their Ivy League counterparts when it comes to securing top graduate schools and positions.

The Hinckley Institute’s staggering growth is most pronounced in the accelerating number of students it impacts. Our opportunities now extend to students of every major and even those in graduate school. We have accordingly expanded our academic programs to offer more classes, think tanks, scholarships, and internships. To illustrate, in just the seven short years since we launched our global internship program, we have placed more than 400 students in almost 60 countries across the globe. It is now celebrated as the best political and humanitarian internship program in the U.S. Cumulating this achievement, this year the Hinckley Institute was charged with overseeing all University of Utah campus global internships in partnership with the new Office for Global Engagement.

Ultimately, the Hinckley Institute has far outgrown its space in Orson Spencer Hall. I am accordingly thrilled to announce that planning is well underway for significant improvements in the quality and quantity of facilities for the Hinckley Institute, within a complete renewal of OSH. The new Price International Pavilion, made possible by a major gift of John and Marcia Price, will provide an anchor to the campus’ most heavily used classroom building. As currently envisioned, the space will feature an immense forum area with capacity scalable to an audience of 500 as well as greatly increased classroom, conference, and office space.

I love the Hinckley Institute and have a deep passion for, and commitment to, its continued growth. I hope you will join me in our mission to extend transformative opportunities to more students.
MALCOLM GLADWELL

On November 5, 2013, the Hinckley Institute honored Malcolm Gladwell, an extraordinarily successful New Yorker staff writer. The internationally bestselling author visited the Hinckley Institute as part of the Sam Rich Lecture Series.

Malcolm Gladwell is a curator of simple, yet immensely profound, phenomena. In 2000, the English-Canadian journalist published The Tipping Point: How Little Things Can Make a Big Difference, a book that provides groundbreaking analysis of how trends are sparked and spread. The Tipping Point spent more than 400 weeks as a New York Times bestseller and entrenched the term in our vernacular. His subsequent books Blink: The Power of Thinking Without Thinking, Outliers: The Story of Success, and What the Dog Saw, were each New York Times bestsellers and firmly established Gladwell as a titan in the publishing world. Perhaps his most anticipated work yet, David and Goliath: Underdogs, Misfits, and the Art of Battling Giants explores the opportunities that can arise out of seemingly debilitating disadvantages.

Gladwell has been a staff writer for the New Yorker since 1996 and formerly served as a science and medicine writer for The Washington Post. He has received numerous honors including from the American Psychological Society, the American Sociological Society, and the University of Toronto. He has been awarded membership to the Order of Canada and is a winner of the National Magazine Award.

Hinckley Fellows

Dr. John Warnock has become a giant in the software and computing industry. Since co-founding Adobe in 1982, he has served as president for its first two years and CEO for the following 16 years. He retired as CEO in 2000 and as CTO in 2001. Today, he is still co-chairman of the board and continues to direct the company, which annually grosses more than $4 billion. Prior to co-founding Adobe, Warnock was a principal scientist at Xerox Palo Alto Research Center. Before Xerox, he held key positions at Evans & Sutherland Computer Corporation, Computer Sciences Corporation, IBM, and the University of Utah. Since 1982, Warnock has been an integral component to the success of Adobe, which has evolved into one of the largest and most recognized software brands in the world.

Warnock has received numerous awards throughout his career including the National Medal of Technology and Innovation, one of the highest national honors awarded to scientists, engineers, and inventors. Warnock has a doctorate in electrical engineering (computer science), a master’s degree in mathematics, and a bachelor’s degree in mathematics and philosophy from the University of Utah. He has also been awarded an honorary degree from the University of Utah.

Dr. John Warnock, Co-Founder, Co-Chairman, and Director of Adobe Systems Inc. was honored on March 5, 2013. Warnock served as the keynote speaker for the 2013 Siciliano Forum.

DR. JOHN WARNOCK
On February 28, Ambassador Nuno Brito addressed the Hinckley Institute on “U.S.-Portugal Relations.” Prior to his appointment, he served as Political Director of Portugal and co-chair of the Portuguese-U.S. Standing Bilateral Commission. Ambassador Brito has a law degree from the University of Lisbon.

On August 27, U.S. Consul General Robert Griffiths spoke to the Hinckley Institute. He is a career member of the U.S. Foreign Service, Counselor rank. He has worked in numerous countries abroad and most recently served as Senior Course Adviser at the Foreign Service Institute in Virginia.

Ambassador John Campbell served as Ambassador in Nigeria twice. He has also served postings in Lyon, Paris, Geneva, and Pretoria. He spoke to Hinckley Institute students on November 12 and now serves as the Ralph Bunche Senior Fellow for Africa Policy Studies, Council on Foreign Relations.

Deputy Consul General Stefan Biedermann spoke to the Hinckley Institute on January 23 in an address entitled, “The European Union: A Personal Experience.” Biedermann works in the Cultural Affairs Department for the German mission in the U.S.

LARGER THAN LIFE: REMEMBERING DR. S. GROVER “SAM” RICH JR.

In November 2013, the Hinckley Institute of Politics published Larger than Life: Remembering Dr. S. Grover “Sam” Rich Jr., written by Hinckley Institute staffer Rochelle M. Parker. This book commemorates the achievements and character of Sam Rich (1918–2009), the renowned political science professor and founder of the University of Utah international relations program who bequeathed more than $2 million upon his passing to the Hinckley Institute. These funds make it possible for the Hinckley Institute to bring prominent international leaders and thinkers to the state for speaking engagements. The first speaker in the Sam Rich Lecture Series was celebrated author Malcolm Gladwell, who spoke at Abravanel Hall on November 5, 2013.

Larger than Life explores Dr. Rich’s upbringing and family life, service as American Vice Consul in Spain during the Second World War, contributions to the study of foreign relations—including 31 years as a professor at the University of Utah—and active participation in community affairs. Copies are available at the Hinckley Institute of Politics. This is Parker’s first book.

THE HINCKLEY JOURNAL OF POLITICS

Volume 14 of the annual Hinckley Journal of Politics features student articles by Melissa Moeinvaziri, Matthew Kirkegaard, Oakley B. Gordon, Nicolas Tang, Eduardo Reyes Chavez, and the inaugural Price Think Tank students with topics ranging from the Revolutionary Association of the Women of Afghanistan to public land bills in Utah. The 2013 volume also contains insightful contributions from public officials. Mayor Ben McAdams provided a paper on his vision for Salt Lake County entitled “A Thriving Metropolitan Area with a ‘Small Town’ Feel.” Utah Senator Luz Robles contributed a paper entitled “Utah Can Model Federal Immigration Reform.” And Lieutenant Governor Greg Bell contributed a paper entitled “Tort Reform in Utah: Disclosure and Apology.”

Student Editors Rosalie Ann Staes and Logan Froerer led an outstanding student editorial board consisting of Bradley Call, Jacob Rush, Tianna Tu, Rosie Neville, Basil Vetas, Amelia Marstaller, David May, Harrison Hawkes, Nelson Warr, Cameron Rowe, Matthew Kirkegaard, Elle Barker, Molly Wheeler, Megan Gessel, and Kendahl Melvin.

STAFF PUBLICATIONS

The Hinckley Institute is a central source of discussion and commentary surrounding many local, national, and international issues. Hinckley Resident Scholar and former Senator Robert Bennett contributes a weekly opinion editorial in the Deseret News. Hinckley Resident Scholar and former Ambassador John Price’s thoughts are frequently featured by the Washington Times. Additionally, Hinckley Director Kirk Jowers provides continual insight and commentary on news culminating in over three hundred annual media hits.

Huntsman Seminar

From June 17–21, 2013, the Hinckley Institute hosted its 14th annual Huntsman Seminar for Teachers. The five-day seminar is sponsored by the Jon and Karen Huntsman Foundation and focuses primarily on improving civic education in Utah schools. Participants learned from a variety of speakers including university faculty, Utah elected officials, political experts, and judges. Notable speakers included Dr. Dan Jones, Kirk Jowers, Senator Pat Jones, Speaker Becky Lockhart, and Chief Judge Ted Stewart, among others.

UCCD Partnership

In 2013, The Hinckley Institute of Politics continued to collaborate with the Utah Council for Citizen Diplomacy (UCCD). UCCD is an independent, nonpartisan, nonprofit 501-C-3 organization which strives to promote respect and understanding between the people of Utah and other nations. Together with UCCD, the Hinckley Institute helps facilitate exchanges between foreign delegations and Utah professionals and students.

Real Women Run

In 2013, Student Staff Assistants Lisa Hawkins and Kendahl Melvin became co-presidents of the University of Utah Real Women Run effort. Real Women Run is a collaborative nonpartisan effort launched in 2011 to empower women to participate fully in public life and leadership. The Hinckley Institute, led by DC Program Manager Lindsay Zizumbo, has been an integral part in the success of the program. The University of Utah will be the first institution of higher education in Utah to bring Real Women Run to its students.

Peruvian Delegation

Hinckley Institute Director Kirk Jowers met with Peruvian President Humala and other dignitaries at the Peruvian Embassy in Washington, DC, to assist in the joint-signing of a Memorandum of Understanding. The historic agreement formalized the growing economic ties between Peru and Utah as well as outlined strategies for future sustainable economic development.

Project Youth

The Hinckley Institute engaged 600 6th grade students from Title I schools with an interactive presentation about civic participation and the importance of voting. Using clicker devices, the students engaged in several polls, ranging from their for choice presidential candidate to their favorite Utah Jazz player, in order to experience first-hand the satisfaction of voting participation. “Project Youth” is sponsored by the Bennion Community Service Center in order to encourage university attendance.

U.N. Women: Utah Chapter

With the support of the Hinckley Institute, the U.S. National Committee for United Nations Women recognized Utah as its newest chapter in 2013. The U.N. Women’s chapter strives to promote gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls around the world. The Utah Chapter was co-founded by Victoria Baird and Nicole Eberhardt with board member support from Hinckley Institute Assistant Director Courtney McBeth.

Turkey Lectures

Hinckley Institute Director Kirk Jowers visited universities in Istanbul and Ankara in March to establish relationships and deliver a series of lectures on the 2012 presidential elections and political developments in the U.S.

Bosnia Lectures

The Hinckley Institute’s Courtney McBeth traveled to Sarajevo in October to participate in the AUDEM Conference. She presented with Dr. Ruth Gerritsen-McKane on “Democracy and the University in a Turbulent World” and “The Songdo, South Korea Initiative.”

Sponsorships

The Hinckley Institute of Politics Wayne Owens Fund helped sponsor both the Dead Sea Scrolls exhibition at The Leonardo and the University of Utah’s Model Arab League. The Wayne Owens Fund was established in 2006 by S. Daniel Abraham for fostering educational opportunities for students and faculty through an endowed professorship.
The Hinckley Institute hosted a remarkable 101 forums in 2013. Hinckley Institute Associate Director Jayne Nelson organized 59 spring semester forums and 42 fall semester forums. We are extremely grateful for her dedication in tackling this immense task with such grace and professionalism.

Hinckley Forums have become increasingly popular for students, faculty, and community members. Indeed, many were standing-room-only with overflow viewing on closed-circuit television.

This year’s forums featured an array of esteemed local, national, and foreign dignitaries, as well as a number of notable authors, academics, and policy experts.

Past Hinckley Forum guests include major figures such as Bill Clinton, Mitt Romney, Thomas Friedman, and John McCain.

Hinckley forums are always open to the public and recorded podcasts are available on KUER’s website. Forums also are featured on KCPW’s Hinckley Radio Hour every Wednesday from 10:00–11:00 AM.

For a calendar of Hinckley Forums visit: www.hinckley.utah.edu/events/

INTERNSHIPS INVALUABLE FOR SUCCESS

Recent studies have heralded internships as integral to a student’s job competitiveness. The Hinckley Institute has championed prestigious internships since its founding in 1965 and continues to pioneer innovative and affordable work experience opportunities.

University degrees promise educated individuals. Internships promise professionals. In today’s job market, entering the field armed only with a degree won’t put a graduate at the top. An internship, however, guarantees a force with which to be reckoned. U.S. News reports, “Employers almost universally maintain that partaking in an internship—or several…—before graduation is integral to finding meaningful employment in today’s seemingly impenetrable job market.”

The terrifying reality is that “54% of recent graduates are unemployed or underemployed.”

In today’s job market, entering the field armed only with a degree won’t put a graduate at the top. (Forbes, 2012). A student’s most successful chance of escaping that statistic is to complete an internship. In fact, students graduate at a stark disadvantage without the experience of an internship according to a survey conducted by the National Association of Colleges and Employers. “Nearly two-thirds of graduating seniors from the Class of 2013 took part in an internship.”

In the transition from the academic world to the work force, an individual’s fate is decided by what sets him or her apart from the masses. Internships demonstrate this exact separation, evidencing a graduate’s capacity outside the classroom and proving their possession of real, applicable skills.

As CNN so concisely states: “You need an internship.” Professional potential aside, internships offer an invaluable opportunity for self-evaluation and self-discovery, either reaffirming one’s academic path or inspiring one to redirect it. Forbes magazine points out that early workplace experience “offers a chance to re-evaluate your anticipated career and perhaps adjust your coursework and your major if your internship experience causes you to change your mind about where you’re headed.” Without an internship, such a pivotal realization may never surface until the chance for transformation has passed.

Ultimately, the Hinckley Institute finds that students who supplement their degree with one or more internships step into the post-grad community with the experience employers and graduate programs covet. Securing admission to top graduate schools like Harvard and positions with innovative companies like Google, former Hinckley students are recognized as driven, capable, and competitive.

NEW PARTNERSHIP WITH THE OFFICE FOR GLOBAL ENGAGEMENT

The Hinckley Institute is now recognized as the official source for global internship opportunities campus-wide.

In 2013, the Hinckley Institute assumed sole ownership of the University of Utah’s global internships in partnership with the new Office for Global Engagement (OGE). Hinckley Institute Associate Director, Courtney McBeth, was named the OGE Director of Global Internships, a key member of the OGE senior leadership team. McBeth will continue to serve as Hinckley Institute Associate Director as she additionally works to promote new global opportunities for University of Utah students. Furthermore, Hinckley Institute Director, Kirk Jowers, will function as a Chief Advisor to the OGE in addition to his role at the Hinckley Institute.

The OGE was created to promote cross-campus collaboration and support of global initiatives at the University of Utah. As a highly ranked world-class university with extensive global research, the OGE strives to provide the University of Utah campus community with the necessary resources, coordination, advice, guidelines, and services for global education, programs, research, and partnerships. The OGE ultimately intends to deliver a single point of contact for global initiatives.
THE HINCKLEY INSTITUTE'S FUTURE: PLANNING FOR THE PRICE INTERNATIONAL PAVILION

CONCEPTUAL RENDERING
THE HINCKLEY INSTITUTE’S FUTURE: PLANNING FOR THE PRICE INTERNATIONAL PAVILION

A space as innovative as the programs it will house.

In celebration of the Hinckley Institute’s 50th anniversary, we are thrilled to announce that extensive planning is well underway for a new home for the Institute through the creation of the Price International Pavilion. The new space will be named in honor of a major gift from John and Marcia Price, who share a deep commitment to civic learning and the advancement of international affairs. The Price’s gift will not only allow us to build on our historic excellence in extending transformative opportunities to more students and event access to more community members; it is also the catalyst for full renewal of Orson Spencer Hall (OSH), the crossroads of interdisciplinary social and global scholarship on campus. Students and faculty will benefit from additional classroom spaces equipped with technology for 21st century instruction. Most importantly, the facility will bring students into more meaningful contact with a broader global perspective.

Explosive Growth at the Hinckley Institute

Since its launch 49 years ago, the Hinckley Institute has grown far beyond its initial conceptualization. During its inaugural school year in 1965, the Institute celebrated placing a total of 18 students in internships (four local, 12 legislative, and two national). In contrast, just last year we placed 321 interns (150 local, 21 legislative, 88 national, and 62 global). In sum, the Hinckley Institute has secured internships for an estimated 6,000 University of Utah students. With the Hinckley Institute’s new responsibilities over all campus global internships, this number promises to increase exponentially.

Remarkably, the size of the Hinckley Institute’s facilities have remained unchanged during five decades of massive growth. At present, we are only able to house six full-time staff and three part-time students due to the severe space constraints (a number comparable to the staff required in the 1970s). While, our exceptional team has still been able to increase the number of Hinckley internships, forums, symposia, courses, advising, media, and partnerships, we will be able to significantly expand the scale of each of these ventures once we have more office space and on-site support staff.

Hinckley students and staff have long endured cramped facilities and a lack of useful meeting, office, and classroom space. The number of attendees at our Hinckley Forums has been limited to 150—standing-room-only—when often masses more are forced to congregate in the hallways, Hinckley offices, and even stairwells of OSH in order to observe the forums on closed circuit television. We’ve welcomed thousands of esteemed guests, including national and global leaders, to OSH’s antiquated facilities—no doubt leaving an inaccurate impression of the University of Utah’s thriving campus.

Ultimately, we lack the modern technological facilities needed to allow our existing and pending programs to thrive to their fullest potential.

Planning for New Facilities to House our Innovative Programs

Fortunately, a new home is on the horizon to champion global engagement and expand the opportunities for a signature U experience. The Price International Pavilion is a core component of the vision for the renewal of Orson Spencer Hall.

As currently envisioned, the new space includes the following features:

- An exceptional central campus location in close proximity to the Marriott Library.
- A staging area for the university’s global mission and a venue for hosting delegations and speakers from around the world.
- A dynamic, tiered speaking hall scalable (with balconies) to 500 seats. This new space will function as the epicenter of the university’s intellectual dialogue and debate.
- A one-stop office for securing international travel documentation (visas and passports).
- Welcoming student study hubs in addition to a café and coffee shop.
- Blended classrooms featuring state-of-the-art technology to serve students from many majors and programs, bringing them into contact with the larger vision of international issues in society.
- An extremely efficient structure to promote sustainability, conserve water, and save energy.

The new Price International Pavilion has been made possible by the vision and leadership of Ambassador John Price and Marcia Price, and the generosity of the Price Family Foundation. A current Hinckley Resident Scholar, Ambassador Price envisions a new OSH and the Price International Pavilion as creating a vibrant core for the U’s main campus, and facilitating a better atmosphere for understanding the world and furthering the great mission of the Hinckley Institute and other global programs at the U.

In regards to the Institute’s future, the Ambassador stated, “Around the globe, poverty is a growing concern. Poverty’s companion is hopelessness. Education can fill the void of hope—and provide a way forward—for a better future to fulfill a child’s dreams and aspirations. This is how we create the leaders of tomorrow.” His wife, Marcia Price noted that the foundation is dedicated to education, the environment, and cultural enrichment: “Our best endeavors as human beings are our creations, our dreams, beliefs, and aspirations—education enlightens us.”

The Hinckley Institute is justifiably excited about the proposed new space within the renewal of OSH. It will immediately improve the environment for our students, our community members, and our distinguished guests.
At a time when tuition costs are skyrocketing, for-profit universities are gaining traction, and approximately one-third of U.S. students have already taken an online course, the future of higher education is unclear. In recognition of this changing landscape, the Hinckley Institute of Politics was proud to present the 16th Annual Rocco C. and Marion S. Siciliano Forum: Considerations on the Status of the American Society, which examined “The Future of Higher Education.”

The forum included a keynote address, several RadioWest shows broadcast live on KUER, a documentary sneak peak, and other events held from March 4–12. Primary co-sponsors included the Honors College and the College of Engineering. Other sponsors included RadioWest, the Department of Education, and the Electronic Arts and Engineering Program. All events were free and open to students as well as to community members.

The Siciliano Forum was established through an original endowment by Rocco C. and Marion S. Siciliano in 1997. The Siciliano Forum serves to provide annual opportunities for thoughtful deliberation regarding public trust and related issues. Inquiries of the Siciliano forum encompass available factual information, but also may include ethical and/or spiritual considerations. Public presentations are intended to address the country’s most pressing, least tractable issues. The forum strives to adhere to a nonpartisan agenda but recognizes that public discussions could lead to a constructive political process. Forum programs and activities included a lecture series involving participants such as nationally recognized commentators, public officials, educators, and others qualified to speak on pressing educational issues.

Dr. John Warnock delivered the keynote address on Tuesday, March 6. Warnock conveyed his belief that higher education is on the precipice of transformation. According to Warnock, the current educational system faces tough challenges, due to its antiquated nature. Not only can technology transform education, it must become a part of the educational framework.

Dr. Warnock recalls the critical role the University of Utah played in training many of the most esteemed pioneers in computer science. The list includes Nolan Bushnell, who founded Atari; Alan Kay, who developed the graphical user interface behind Macintosh computers; Alan Ashton, the co-founder of Word Perfect; Jim Clark, the founder of Netscape; Jim Blinn, the graphics expert at NASA’s Jet Propulsion Lab; Patrick Baudelaire, the creator of the first Draw program; Ed Catmull, the principal and co-founder of Pixar; and Dr. Warnock, himself. But MOOCs and immersive, game-based learning may be just the beginning. Dr. Warnock estimates that higher education will be fundamentally different in just 10–15 years. It is a transformation that will impact us all.
The Siciliano Forum kicked off with a live RadioWest broadcast with Henry J. Eyring, co-author of The Innovative University: Changing the DNA of Higher Education from the Inside Out. Eyring was recently celebrated in Forbes for his creative reform as BYU Idaho’s Advancement V.P. He argues that colleges and universities cannot be dismissive of the future. They must aggressively respond to technology, dropping student retention rates, and soaring tuition.

Alternate Reality Games (ARGs), Massively Multiplayer Online (MMO) games, and simulation-based games are asserting themselves as invaluable tools for professors. According to the New Media Consortium’s 2012 report on technology trends in education, “the horizon for widespread adoption of game-based learning is just two to three years away.” World-renowned game developer, futurist, and New York Times best-selling author Dr. Jane McGonigal discussed this phenomena and its ramifications. In Dr. McGonigal’s book, Reality is Broken: Why Games Make Us Better and How they Can Change the World, she argues that gaming injects optimism and confidence into learners. Failure in game-based learning is not an embarrassing experience; it is merely a challenge that can be overcome through creativity and persistence.

It is estimated that tuition rates have quadrupled since the 1980s, leaving many to wonder if the model is sustainable for today’s middle-class, let alone lower-class, students. Some argue that our universities are simply dysfunctional and inefficient. Others assert it is more complicated than that. The scholars Robert Archibald and Nicholas Hillman explored those questions and more in front of a live RadioWest audience in the Hinckley Caucus Room.
The magnanimous funds bequeathed upon Dr. Sam Rich’s passing will allow the Hinckley Institute to bring preeminent global leaders and thinkers to the state for large-scale speaking engagements.

Dr. S. Grover “Sam” Rich Jr. (1918–2009) dedicated his life to the study of international relations. Dr. Rich earned degrees at the University of Utah and Stanford, returning to the U as a professor of political science for 31 years. Before entering his career in academia, Dr. Rich served as the American Vice Consul in Valencia, Spain, during World War II. He received the University of Utah's first Ford Foundation fellowship, allowing him to study the international relations programs at Princeton, Yale, and Columbia before establishing a program at the U. Dr. Rich lectured at renowned institutions around the world and was appointed by President John F. Kennedy to serve as a Professor of Foreign Affairs at the National War College in Washington, DC, in 1962. Wherever he taught, Dr. Rich was beloved by his many students; he challenged their views and broadened their minds in the field of global affairs.

Perhaps most prized to Sam were his family relationships; he married Ruth Bennion Summershays in 1941, and they enjoyed 68 wonderful years of marriage. Sam and Ruth had two children: Samuel Grover Rich III, who was killed in a car accident at a young age, and Laurie Rich Coulson, a devoted daughter throughout their lives. Whether at the family dinner table, in social circles, or on the golf course, Sam was known to enjoy a good political debate.

Dr. Rich was an active force in the community and a generous philanthropist, serving as President of the Salt Lake Committee on Foreign Relations, President of the Utah United Nations Association, State Director of UNESCO, and with various school boards and art associations. Sam gave freely to the University of Utah, especially to KUED, the Huntsman Cancer Institute, and Pioneer Memorial Theater. He first established the Sam Rich Program in International Politics in 2000, and the magnanimous funds bequeathed upon his passing will allow the Hinckley Institute to bring prominent international leaders and thinkers to the state for speaking engagements.

Said Fred Esplin, Vice President of Institutional Advancement at the University of Utah, “Sam influenced generations of students through his lectures and teaching, something that carries on today in the lives of those who studied under him….Through Sam and Ruth's generous gifts to the university, thousands of people for generations to come will be the beneficiaries of his commitment to broaden public understanding of our collective history and form of government.” Hinckley Institute Director Kirk Jowers confirmed, “Sam’s legacy will live on with U students for decades more through his creation, vision, and support of this wonderful program.”
Celebrated author and New Yorker staff writer Malcolm Gladwell was the inaugural Sam Rich Lecture guest. He has written five extraordinarily successful books that have changed the way we think about our world—even to the point of inspiring the term “Gladwellian.”

Dubbed by Time magazine as one of the 100 most influential people in the world and by Foreign Policy as a leading Top Global Thinker, Gladwell’s five books have topped the charts on the New York Times bestsellers list and three have also been number-one international bestsellers.

His first book, The Tipping Point, has been a New York Times bestseller for 400+ weeks and has embedded the word into our vernacular. His second book, Outliers, examines the way we understand success and has entrenched the “ten thousand hour rule” into our collective consciousness.

Gladwell’s latest acclaimed book, David and Goliath: Underdogs, Misfits, and the Art of Battling Giants, challenges how we think about obstacles and disadvantages by drawing upon history, psychology, and powerful storytelling. Gladwell ultimately offers a new interpretation of what it means to cope with a disability, lose a parent, or suffer from any number of other perceived setbacks.

In his sold-out Sam Rich lecture at Abravanel Hall, Gladwell celebrated two unexpected heroes of the women’s suffrage movement who overcame immense societal barriers.

He additionally participated in a live RadioWest broadcast in front of a standing-room-only crowd in the Hinckley Institute Caucus Room; interviewed with local media that generated more than a dozen television, radio, and newspaper articles; addressed an intimate VIP dinner for Hinckley Institute supporters and community leaders; met with University of Utah students; was presented by Hinckley Institute Chair Jim Hinckley and Director Kirk Jowers as a 2013 Hinckley Fellow; and enjoyed a book signing.

In his most recent book, David and Goliath: Underdogs, Misfits, and the Art of Battling Giants, Gladwell challenges the conventional wisdom that Ivy League universities offer better opportunities for undergraduate students.

Indeed, Gladwell demonstrates that the best students from mediocre schools almost always prove more successful than good students from the elite schools. This is because being a “big fish” in a little pond has significant advantages. Little ponds encourage individuality and innovation while also providing support and community.

In contrast, being surrounded by the best students in a big pond can lead to discouragement.
“The Hinckley Institute has redefined my academic and career goals and pushed me beyond my assumed limitations.”

The Hinckley Institute is pleased to present the most impressive interns of 2013.

ROB BISHOP OUTSTANDING INTERN

Eric William Call is a junior political science student at the University of Utah, pursuing a certificate in international relations. He is hoping to pursue a career in either intelligence or journalism on the international level. Born and raised in Bountiful, Utah, he enjoys taking advantage of the great outdoors of the state through hiking, backpacking, camping, and running. He speaks fluent French and is learning Arabic to further his involvement in international relations.

Jesse Taylor was chosen to intern within the Department of Justice Civil Rights Division Voting Section. During his semester, he was able to utilize his research and skills sharpened by years of school. He recently obtained his major in political science with a minor in business in December 2013. He is thankful for having been able to serve such a memorable Hinckley internship.

BEN WOOD OUTSTANDING INTERN

Geneva Thompson recently graduated with majors in History, Political Science, and Asian Studies and with minors in Chinese and International Studies. She is currently at the University of California Los Angeles School of Law. At the University she was involved with many different organizations including the Bennion Center as a program director and ASUU as the 2012–13 student body president. She had the opportunity of interning with both Representative Litvack at the Utah House of Representatives and with Congressman Matheson at the United States House of Representatives.

TED WILSON OUTSTANDING INTERN

Kaitie Jowers is a sophomore at the University of Utah majoring in political science. She recently completed an internship at the Utah Governor’s Office of Economic Development. Previously, Kaitie interned with Maitri India, an NGO based in New Delhi, and with Yeah Samake’s 2013 Presidential Campaign. Currently, she is serving a mission for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Moscow, Russia, beginning in January 2014.

ROCCO SICILIANO OUTSTANDING INTERN

Ryan Eldridge recently graduated from the University of Utah with bachelor’s degrees in political science and international studies and is now in the process of serving his second Hinckley internship. He currently works in Washington, DC, at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars as a research assistant and translator. His experiences with the Hinckley have provided him the opportunity to work with some of the brightest minds in political science, helping launch his career in international development.

ROCCO SICILIANO OUTSTANDING INTERN

Christianna Tu is a senior majoring in honors political science and international studies. In addition to completing two local internships, one with the Utah Council for Citizen Diplomacy and the other as a House Minority Leader intern at the Utah State Legislature, Tianna has volunteered on two local campaigns. She most recently returned from a summer internship in Washington, DC, with the U.S. Department of State's International Organization Affairs Bureau Office of Human Rights (IO).

ROCCO SICILIANO OUTSTANDING INTERN

Sam Ziller served an internship in Washington, DC, for the Department of Veterans Affairs, Office of Congressional and Legislative Affairs. He is a Strategic Communications major and working on a minor in business. A senior at the University of Utah, he is involved with the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity organization.
Rachel Wooton is a senior in political science and environmental geoscience. She is currently Academic Affairs Director in ASUU, an Ambassador of the College of Social and Behavioral Science, and Chair of the Political Science Student Advisory Committee. This summer she interned with the Bureau of Land Management at the division of Cultural Paleontological Resources and Tribal Consultation and the division of the National Landscape Conservation System in Washington, DC. She had a great experience as a Hinckley intern.

Rebecca Rasmussen is a senior pursuing an honors degree in business marketing and political science. Rebecca recently completed an internship at the White House within the Social Office, a component of the Office of the First Lady. Through this internship, Rebecca had the opportunity to assist in all aspects of the planning process for events. Rebecca plans to graduate and pursue a career in political communications or government relations.

Michael Wittke recently graduated with a Bachelor of Social Work degree. Earlier this year, he interned at the National Association for Home Care and Hospice (NAHC). His internship experience through the Hinckley Institute has led to full time employment in the executive office of a major national trade association and has significantly augmented his skills in advocacy, lobbying, and non-profit management. Since graduation Michael has had the opportunity work in the political arena on behalf of vulnerable, disabled, and aging populations who are in need of long-term health care.

Wayne Horiuchi is a senior pursuing an honors degree in business marketing and political science. Rebecca recently completed an internship at the White House within the Social Office, a component of the Office of the First Lady. Through this internship, Rebecca had the opportunity to assist in all aspects of the planning process for events. Rebecca plans to graduate and pursue a career in political communications or government relations.

Hillary Koellner was born in Lima, Peru; later moving to the U.S. She is graduating with a degree in communication studies. Hillary has been involved with the Hinckley Institute on a variety of levels. She competed an internship with Rep. Jim Matheson throughout the summer in Washington, DC; served as a forum host during the fall; and interned with CBS during the spring.

Mario Organista is passionate about international affairs, public policy, and public service all of which have prompted him to complete three internships through the Hinckley Institute of Politics: interning during the 2013 Utah Legislative Session, completing a global internship in Mexico City, and interning for the U.S. Senate Majority Leader. He is a member of the Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity.

Jordan Fischer graduated from the University of Utah with majors in international studies and economics and minors in Mandarin Chinese and Spanish. She participated in three internships with the Hinckley Institute of Politics: locally with the Ouelessebougou Alliance; globally with Wizard China; and nationally, at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars. In large part thanks to her eye-opening and highly enjoyable experience at the Wilson Center, she decided to relocate to DC to pursue a career in international policy research.

Parker Erickson interned in the United States Senate Finance Committee under the direction Ranking Member Orrin Hatch (R-UT). Parker worked directly with the Chief Oversight Counsel within the Committee and was heavily involved in the Senate Finance Committee's investigation into the IRS inappropriately targeting conservative organizations. Parker is currently a junior at the University of Utah and is majoring in political science. He plays on the University of Utah football team and is a member of the Hinckley Journal of Politics Editorial Board.

Heather McGee is a senior majoring in political science and has completed several internships through the Hinckley Institute of Politics: as an intern for Peter Corroon's gubernatorial race, as an intern for Representative Jen Seelig, and most recently, as the campaign finance intern for Molly Allen Associates, a private financial consulting firm in Washington, DC. Aside from her involvement with the Hinckley, she has worked for the Utah State Democratic Party as the Office Manager and Assistant to the Chair, as well serving as the President of the College Democrats of Utah since 2012.

SCHOLARSHIP RECIPIENTS

The Hinckley Institute awarded $28,500 in academic scholarships during 2013. Academic scholarship recipients are selected from a wide range of disciplines.

ROBERT H. HINCKLEY GRADUATE SCHOLARSHIP

Cody Jenkins is a first year law student at the University of Utah S.J. Quinney College of Law. He has completed two Hinckley internships, one in the state legislature with Representative Bradley Last and former Speaker of the House David Clark. The other was with the Utah Taxpayers Association, in which he helped Senator Howard Stephenson publish articles on education reform. “I am eternally grateful for the opportunities provided me through the Hinckley Institute of Politics. My internships have been a vital part of my growth and education. I encourage all to meet the staff and take advantage of the many opportunities available.”

ABRELIA CLARISSA HINCKLEY GRADUATE SCHOLARSHIP

Ellesse S. Balli graduated from the University of Utah summa cum laude with an Honors Degree and a Bachelor of Arts in English. She is now pursuing a Master of Education at the University of Utah in the Department of Instructional Design and Education Technology, where she is studying media-enriched pedagogy. Formerly, Ellesse was Art Director for the Diplomatic Courier for which she served a Hinckley internship in 2009. In addition to her graduate schoolwork, she serves as the Communications and Academic Coordinator for the Hinckley Institute and heads Open Chalkboard, a non-profit, innovative resource for teachers.

JOHN & ANNE HINCKLEY SCHOLARSHIP

Lisa Hawkins is a junior pursuing an honors degree in political science as well as in communication with an emphasis on journalism and a minor in peace and conflict studies. Her political interest was piqued during a summer internship in the Governor's Office. Lisa's growing passion for politics and writing were furthered by her experience in both Resident Scholar symposiums. Formerly, Lisa has directed the political segment on the University’s cable broadcast, Newsbreak, and recently returned from an internship in New Delhi, India, with NGO Maitri.

MATHESON LEADERSHIP SCHOLARSHIP

Jamison Gordon is a senior majoring in chemistry. He has had the opportunity to work as an Orientation Leader, Campus Life Mentor, and has served as moderator for the Bennion-Hinckley Forum on Hunger. A TA for organic chemistry and anatomy, he is looking forward to medical school. His research includes work with the Invent Program through bioengineering and at the Moran Eye Center. He has traveling to Ghana, Africa, as a Global Fellow with Unite for Sight where he volunteered in surgery and assisted with triage in outreach to remote villages.

MATHESON LEADERSHIP SCHOLARSHIP

Maximilian Stiefel is a senior at the University of Utah majoring in environmental & sustainability studies and economics. Mr. Stiefel is passionate about sustainable development from a heterodox perspective. He seeks to incorporate globalized and place-based development models that yield sustainable results to achieve resilient communities, environmental conservation, and robust economies. Mr. Stiefel intends to work towards a Ph.D., wherein he would like to study the relationship between environmental change, development, and security. In addition to his academic interests he is an avid cook, traveler, and outdoors enthusiast.

SUAZO LEADERSHIP FOUNDATION SCHOLARSHIP

Camila Esposito is studying health society and policy at the University of Utah. She is currently a junior in academic standing and hopes to apply to medical school within the next two years. Camila's latest intern experience was working for Medical Care Development International in Washington, DC, during the Fall 2013 Semester.

Morgan joined the Hinckley Institute in June 2012 as Local Program Manager. Morgan was a Hinckley intern as an undergrad at the U and completed two other internships before graduating. She credits these internships with positioning her to be accepted into competitive graduate programs and hired at great organizations and agencies. She is thrilled to be back at the U where she can offer the same guidance and support to students that she received while on campus. Morgan will also be working as an Associate Instructor for the Center for Public Policy and Administration where she will primarily work with graduate students. In addition, the Hinckley Institute and CPPA will utilize her research experience to work on academic, political, and public policy research projects.

Leo began working for the Hinckley Institute in September 2013. He is a sophomore pursuing degrees in political science and urban planning. Leo served a Hinckley internship at the Office of Governor Gary R. Herbert during the summer of 2013, where his zeal for the political process was strengthened and affirmed. Leo was selected as a National Campaign Ambassador of the Harvard Institute of Politics and represented the Hinckley Institute at its annual conference in Boston in October 2013. He also belongs to the University of Utah’s Student Alumni Board, its Elections Committee, and sits on an advisory committee for the Utah Transit Authority.
Hinckley Institute Director Kirk Jowers’ portrait is the fifth to grace the walls of the Hinckley Caucus Room.

On September 20, Jim and Lyn Hinckley presented the formal portrait unveiling of Hinckley Institute Director Kirk L. Jowers in the Hinckley Caucus Room. The portrait was painted by celebrated Russian artist Galina Perova. Perova graduated top of her class from the prestigious Repin Academy of Art in St. Petersburg.

She has received numerous public and private commissions and has exhibited her work extensively. Her remarkable portraits grace the walls of prominent leaders all over the country. Notably, the International Portrait Society awarded her “Best of Show” in 2010. Perova describes art as the epicenter of her life: “If I stop painting, I will stop living.”

Jowers just completed his eighth year as the Hinckley Institute of Politics’ fourth director. He follows J.D. Williams who served from 1965 to 1975, R.J. Snow who served from 1975 to 1985, and Ted Wilson who served from 1985 to 2003. In addition to his capacity at the Hinckley Institute, Jowers is also a partner in the Washington, DC, law firm of Caplin & Drysdale, and serves as the Director of Federal Relations, Chief Advisor to the Office of Global Engagement, and Associate Professor of Political Science for the University of Utah. He is the 2007 recipient of the University of Utah’s Par Excellence Award. He is married to Kristen Jowers and has five children.
