FOR MORE THAN A DECADE,

Mission Lazarus has made its impact in homes, churches, clinics, schools, and the marketplace in Honduras and in Haiti, by leveraging the existing strengths in the community, collaborating to empower individuals and their families to meet their own needs and promote their own well-being.

What's next?

Our goal is to expand our influence to provide transformative services to the next 100,000 people in Honduras and Haiti.
"It's not the opportunities, as much as the setbacks, that cause you to re-examine your commitment. If you quit, you likely miss out on something great just ahead, but if it spurs you on, you overcome the challenges through sheer perseverance."
- Jarrod

"Deciding to open a children's home was the scariest idea we ever contemplated. There's no deeper commitment than to raise a child and prepare him for the world we live in, and surely, no better investment."
- Allison

"In rural areas, if a young person pursues education, it deprives the family of income. We pay our students to learn vocational skills, and sell their products, which sustains our operations and provides fair income for the artisan. It's a refreshing 'win' for everyone."
- Jarrod

"For the families on the mountain, coffee is their heritage but it has not been a viable livelihood. Unfortunately, very rarely do fair trade wages trickle down to the coffee pickers themselves. We are proud to pay every worker 25% above established fair wages, effectively unifying heritage and livelihood again on the mountain."
- Jarrod

"We unreservedly believe that sustainability exists where individuals within a system invest mutually for the benefit of one or both. For Mission Lazarus, it is tapping into national human resources to participate interdependently toward a uniform goal of transforming the lives of their own people."
- Allison
