ICMA NEWS

FROM THE EDITOR

The myriad ways in which we look at, think about and study medieval art seem to proliferate almost daily. This sort of diversity, stimulating and welcome though it is, has resulted in a breathtaking amount of information, exhibitions, endeavors and publications. No one of us can be fully informed. Hence, I hope that the ICMA Newsletter will become a community bulletin board for which all members, foreign and domestic, share responsibility. Although the ICMA office is on the standard mailing lists, further information on such matters as exhibitions, related societies and their newsletters, dissertations completed and in progress, the opening and/or closing of monuments, museums and libraries, recent acquisitions and appointments will be welcomed. Your efforts will be appreciated by our entire community. Please send news to the Editor, ICMA Newsletter, The International Center of Medieval Art, The Cloisters, Fort Tryon Park, New York NY 10040. The telephone number is 212-928-1146. Deadlines for submission are 1 April for the Spring issue, 1 September for the Fall issue and 1 December for the Winter issue. I thank all of you for your interest and assistance.

ICMA SESSIONS AT KALAMAZOO 1993: CALL FOR PAPERS

The ICMA will sponsor sessions on THE HEROIC AND ANTI-HEROIC BODY IN MEDIEVAL ART at the Twenty-Eighth International Congress on Medieval Studies at Western Michigan University, Kalamazoo, May 1993. The sessions will be organized by Pamela Sheingorn and Diane Wolfthal. Description: Feminist approaches to art history have significantly reshaped our understanding of the Middle Ages, which we must now see as a period in which women as well as men played a wide range of cultural roles. We suggest that it is now time to use a feminist approach in the analysis of subjects that include both males and females. As a focused topic through which to explore gender roles as they are constructed in Medieval art, we propose to center our sessions on the body of the hero, along with its inversion, the anti-hero. Possible subjects for papers might include: the vulnerable and invulnerable body; the heroic ideal and its alternatives; changing ideas of the male body; the female hero; the female as anti-hero; the construction of hero and anti-hero as opposites; issues of sexuality and androgyny. We do not subscribe to, nor do we expect papers in these sessions to employ, one particular methodology, but we suggest that whatever methodological approach is being employed be clearly articulated in the paper. Send abstracts to Pamela Sheingorn, Art Dept. Box 281, Baruch College, CUNY, 17 Lexington Avenue, New York NY 10010, or Diane Wolfthal, Dept. of Art History, Manhattanville College, 125 Purchase Street, Purchase NY 10577, by October 15, 1992.

The call for papers for the 1993 Kalamazoo Conference incorrectly noted that ICMA is to sponsor a session entitled "Medieval Art Historians Look at The Gaze" organized by Paula Gerson. That session is instead sponsored by the Feminist Medieval Art History Project.

THE CLOISTERS: STUDIES IN HONOR OF THE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY, edited by Elizabeth C. Parker with the assistance of Mary B. Shepard. The twenty-two studies in this commemorative volume include papers given at the symposium marking the Fiftieth Anniversary of The Cloisters held in 1988. The studies offered here include discussions of the Museum's history, as well as papers emphasizing new research on specific works of art in the collection and keynote papers by Ilene Forsyth and Willibald Sauerländer presenting critical reviews of the present state of research on Romanesque and Gothic Art respectively. Published by the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the International Center of Medieval Art, this volume is listed at $55.00. By special arrangement with the Metropolitan Museum of Art we are able to offer it to individual members at a discounted price of $41.00 plus $2.00 ($43.00 total). You may place your order with Margaret Lubel, ICMA, The Cloisters, Fort Tryon Park, New York NY 10040. 484 pp., 459 illustrations including 8 colorplates.

ICMA COMPUTER: For the first time, the camera ready copy of the Newsletter was produced using ICMA's new computer equipment, a 386/25 MHz. Personal Computer with a Hewlett Packard Laser Jet IIIIP printer. The Newsletter layout was designed using Microsoft Word for Windows 2.0. On behalf of all the members, the editor would like to thank both Margaret Lubel, our energetic Administrative Assistant, for her quick mastery of the technical details and Bryan Lubel of Compaq Computer Corporation who has generously donated countless hours of free consulting to ICMA.

RESOURCES IN MEDIEVAL ART

Index of Christian Art

The Index of Christian Art, founded in 1917 at Princeton University, remains the premier institution for the study of medieval iconography anywhere in the world. With over 25,000 different subjects, alphabetically listed from Alpha & Omega to Zwentibold of Lorraine, recorded from countless thousands of works of medieval art and a photograph file with close to a quarter million images, the Index is an incomparable resource for the study of the Middle Ages. The Index research staff continues to add to the files and to assist the 300 users we attract every year. In addition to the mother house at Princeton, the Index can be consulted at the library of the Vatican in Rome, the library of the Faculty of Letters at the University of Utrecht in Holland, at Dumbarton Oaks in Washington D.C., and in the library of the art department at the University of California, Los Angeles.

Ironically, the wealth of information the Index now contains is also responsible for certain difficulties that have arisen in its use and maintenance. To ameliorate the situation it was decided to transfer the Index files into a computerized database. The project was begun in 1990 with funding from the Mellon Foundation and Princeton University. It was divided into two phases. At the beginning of the current pilot phase we solicited bids from computer companies to provide appropriate software. After a protracted search we awarded the contract to an Israeli company who markets software developed at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem that is used by the Index of Jewish Art. We then produced a model sufficiently elaborate to deal with the complexities of medieval art and iconography. The range of information we now collect is much wider than previously recorded on our file cards. Although the focus of our work remains the identification of subjects and the iconographic description of works of art, we have begun to document also the original locations for which works were made, the names of patrons who commissioned them, the texts to which they are related, the parts of the liturgy with which manuscript illustrations are associated, states of preservation, early provenances, and so on. The computerized version of the Index, besides allowing quicker access to the iconographic information, will also make possible more elaborate inquiries. Scholars wishing to have a list of those works of art that were commissioned by female patrons in Germany in the 13th and 14th centuries or wanting to know which illustrations usually accompany terce for the Hours of the Virgin in English and Bohemian Books of Hours or which altarpieces were produced for Dominican churches in Tuscany and Umbria between 1300 and 1350 will find the database has been modelled to answer these and questions of comparable complexity. However, mindful of the risk I run of unleashing on Princeton a stampede of eager scholars in search of this new philosopher's stone, I should warn potential visitors that until sufficient data is entered into the machine the results of such searches are likely to be disappointing.

What now remains to be done is to transfer the information on the 700,000 file cards that currently comprise the Index into the computer, having first raised the one million dollars that will be required to do this. Grant applications have already been submitted to the NEH and if successful the Index will be microfilmed and the microfilm shipped for keyboarding in the Antipodes. The resulting tape will be loaded into our database and the job of checking, correcting and updating will begin. In the not too distant future it is hoped a computerized Index will be a reality and that it can be made available to other institutions, possibly on CD ROM, as well as being searchable over one of the main networks like RLIN.

Although computerization has consumed (not quite sapped) much of our energy there have been other diversions. The promotion of the study of medieval art and iconography at the national and international level remains one of our principal aims. To this end we have begun a program of conferences, lectures and publications. The papers from the first two symposia, (on the Ruthwell Cross, December 1989, and Iconography at the Crossroads, March 1990), will be published this autumn as Index of Christian Art, Occasional Papers, I and II. Future conferences and publications will follow as time and funding allows.

In April 1992 the Index moved to larger premises in the same building in which it was formerly housed within the Department of Art & Archaeology. With more office space it is hoped that a fifth researcher can be added to the small staff. The intention is to establish short-term internships to the Index. Young scholars would be invited to come to Princeton for up to one year to engage on a project of their own devising. They would become members of the Index research staff with the purpose of supplementing our database with information we do not currently have on file. In this way gaps in our coverage of, say, East European and Scandinavian art, could be filled and the interns could consolidate their knowledge of their special field prior to applying for more permanent positions elsewhere.

But, as ever, funding is required.

The Summer McKnight Crosby Papers

The Library of The Cloisters has begun to process and describe the scholarly papers of the medieval art historian Summer McKnight Crosby (1909-1982). This research collection focuses on Crosby's life-long study of the Royal Abbey of Saint-Denis and includes manuscript drafts of his published and unpublished works, correspondence, photographs, negatives, films of excavations, and architectural drawings, prints, and teaching models. In 1990, the Crosby family presented these papers to The Cloisters Library for the use of Saint-Denis scholars. The Library will properly organize, store, and describe the materials; upon completion of the project, the collection will be opened to all qualified researchers.

The project began on June 1, 1992. Dr. Pamela Z. Blum, a colleague of Crosby's with extensive knowledge of his work on Saint-Denis, will be consulting on the project. Dr. Blum, an expert on the sculpture of Saint-Denis, edited and completed Crosby's final book posthumously, The Royal Abbey of Saint-Denis, from Its Beginnings to the Death of Suger, 475-1151, Yale University Press, 1987. Many manuscript and typeset drafts of this volume exist within the collection at The Cloisters and represent the focus of Crosby's scholarly work in the field.

The Crosby Papers at The Cloisters Library are currently undergoing the initial processing stages; this includes the organization of materials into general series by format. All materials are transferred to acid-free folders, enclosures, and boxes and are stored in a climate-controlled environment. Once the papers are properly arranged and housed, records will be added to the RLIN computer system and a finding aid to the collection will be produced. The finding aid will include a biographical sketch of Crosby, a note on the scope and content of the collection, a description of the series arrangement, and a complete container listing for each box in the collection.

Through the generosity of Sumner McKnight Crosby, Jr. and his wife Susan, The Cloisters Library recently received a DECpc 320P notebook personal computer for the processing of the Crosby Papers. This gift will increase the rate of processing and enable the Archivist to compile a far more detailed finding aid. The Cloisters also thanks ICMA for its assistance.

The Cloisters Library is currently searching for funding to arrange and describe other important archival collections. These include the papers of medieval scholars Harry Bober and Stephen Gardner. The Library also houses the papers of George Grey Barnard, the collector of medieval art whose material forms the basis of the Cloisters' collection. Upon receipt of adequate funding, these archival collections will also be processed and opened to qualified researchers.

Oxford University Press has sent the following list of new publications:

SOCIETIES

The Medieval Dress and Textile Society was founded in May, 1991. For further details write to Kay Stanland, Secretary, The Museum of London, 150 London Wall EC2Y 5HN.

SITES, MONUMENTS, MUSEUMS

A well-preserved thirteenth century patterned tiled floor has been rediscovered under matting in the octagonal library above the Chapter House at Lichfield Cathedral. It will be published by Dr. Warwick Rodwell and Paul Drury in their forthcoming book on the art and archaeology of the Cathedral.

The Banca Toscana will sponsor the restoration of Cimabue's Maestà made for Santa Trinità in Florence and now in the Uffizi.

Devotees of medieval ivories will be happy to know that, after being closed for more than a decade, the Museo Diocesano in Salerno has reopened. Located in the Seminario Arcivescovile near the cathedral, it also houses a thirteenth-century Exultet Roll.

About fifteen years ago, Hans Peter Autenrieth discovered the remains of an extensive cycle of frescoes in the cathedral of Aosta (Piedmont). Now restored, the frescoes show a Moses in Egypt cycle on one wall and on the other a dozen scenes from the life of St. Eustace, as well as busts of saints and bishops. The frescoes date from 1030-40; one of the painters also worked at Sant'Orso in Aosta. Last May, the frescoes were the subject of a two-day conference coordinated by James Beck. Among the art historians speaking were: Carlo Bertelli (University of Lausanne), Adriano Peroni (University of Pisa), Herbert L. Kessler (The Johns Hopkins University), Paula Leveto-Jabr (Georgia State University), Marie-Thérèse Camus (Poitiers), Joachim Yarza (University of Barcelona) and Beat Brenk (University of Basel).

There is controversy concerning plans to build an extension of the Lycée Sainte-Colette on part of the site of the famed Carolingian abbey complex at Corbie, for it is feared that significant archaeological evidence will be destroyed. To protect and preserve this vital site, the Amis du Vieux Corbie has been founded and numbers many eminent art historians among its members. An active campaign is also necessary to prevent further incursions on the site. Enrollment as a benefactor is 1000 F and regular membership is available in two categories, 100 F and 250 F. Checks should be made out to Amis du Vieux Corbie - Comité de Soutien and sent to the treasurer, Monsieur Daniel Rosiau, 4, rue Léon Curé, 80800 Corbie.

The International Association for Sicilian Monuments has undertaken the restoration of the Gothic crucifix given to the cathedral of Palermo by Manfredo Chiaramonte in 1311.

OBITUARY: Thomas W. Lyman

Tom Lyman, who died February 6 at his home in Atlanta from complications following cancer surgery, was a special presence in the ICMA community. This premature conclusion ended a career especially focussed on, but by no means exclusively dedicated to, a reconstruction of the monuments and impulses behind the opening stages of Romanesque art and architecture.

Just of an age to catch the end of World War II in naval service, he belonged to the generation that caught the flood tide of an expanding world of university education and the opportunities it offered to unite vocation and avocation. It may have been easier for that generation to escape the exclusive professionalism that inevitably set in as this world congealed. Thus he brought with him from Illinois, where he had taught successively at the Art Institute of Chicago, Chicago Circle, The University of Chicago and Southern Illinois University, to Emory in 1967 his commitment to participate actively in the political structure, and to the end he served in those Atlanta entities devoted to the arts and hit the streets in the causes of conservation and racial equality. At the same time he was on the Board of Governors of the Alliance Française. He may have lectured in Germany and Spain, but Tom's Francophilia was his worst kept secret, and there were few years that did not find him in France, a habit which gave an additional edge of excellence to the annotated bibliography, French Romanesque Sculpture, he published in 1987. For their retirement years he and Mollie purchased an apartment in Paris.

It was Languedoc, however, which received his almost undivided attention, in an era when, if we grant Arthur Kingsley Porter his accustomed role of maverick, the Ile-de-France and Burgundy were the preferred fields of American investigation. From his dissertation on, Saint-Sernin at Toulouse was the point of departure in the majority of some fifty papers and two score articles Tom produced, and he left behind a monograph in manuscript on this extraordinarily important site. Tom's work combined the classical concerns with the who, what, where, when and why with the newer streams feeding the currents of scholarship. Thus the title of a book in preparation: Highborn Women and Highminded Men: The 12th-Century Iconography of Misogyny.

As numerous and stimulating as Tom's scholarly contributions might be, he stood out above all as a human being - father, husband, colleague, friend - remarkably unencumbered by the envy the competitive academic world breeds. It was this generosity of spirit that lent a special grace to those times spent in his company.
