When looking at the remains of ancient sites, one wonders about the people who lived there. What did they eat? Where did they go? What were their beliefs? These are some of the questions that archaeologists try to answer. The Piccadilly Institute, located in London, is one such place. It is dedicated to the study of the past through the examination of artifacts and records. The institute has a wide range of exhibits, including ancient tools, pottery, and jewelry. In addition to its permanent displays, the institute also features temporary exhibitions on various topics, such as ancient music and the history of medicine. Visitors can explore the institute's extensive collection of artifacts and learn about the lives of people from the past.
