Q75 - Optional: Please explain your answer to the previous question.

Optional: Please explain your answer to the previous question.

The advisors weren't particularly knowledgeable about opportunities in my field (computer science and art). They just pointed to broad resources and gave general advice. A more specialized advising system would be very helpful. Satisfied with what I have needed from the CCI so far. Intend on applying for internship funding and have not really learned that much about it yet but I do know that far less money is available for students which is very unfortunate. Also don't know much about it but the idea that the grant is a one time thing and you cannot split it is a bit odd, not really sure how I feel about it but might be helpful to have the option of splitting the funds/using it more than once.

I don't feel like I know enough about the CCI to feel totally satisfied.

I really appreciate the funding available for non-paid internships.

I have yet to use the CCI, so I cannot give helpful feedback. I want/need to use it soon though.

N/A

I have no used CCI

Advisors are wonderful and online resources are great. I just wish I could set up longer appointments with advisors--they are 30 minutes and we ALWAYS run out of time and have more things to discuss but no time left to discuss.

The CCI doesn't provide many resources to students looks for internships or jobs unless you're a senior. I believe summer internships are extremely important for college students and offer a great way to spend the summer learning in a non-academic setting. I've done most of my internship application process independently without the CCI because their resources are quite limited. I would LOVE to see a career fair at least once a year on campus. Most schools have career fairs multiple times a year and I've heard it's extremely useful for networking and finding jobs!

Having funding available all years would be helpful.

Students do not take full advantage of all of the resources CCI provides. If they want a job that easily- then they need to ask their parents for one. CCI has all the resources and help there- you just have to use them! (they helped me get an internship at Harvard and now at Goldman Sachs, but only because of persistence!)

Tech internships are under supported, though there has been some recent progress. There is no one qualified to advise on tech interviews + resumes

The CCI seems only focused on the pre business students and doesn't seem to provide much to science students. For example, in November I looked on the cci website for jobs under the “science” category, there was one posting. I think that's unacceptable.

Wish you could get funding for an unpaid internship more than once

Hannah Benz is SOOOOOO nice. I loved getting to speak with her. She's so supportive and really made me feel welcome and encouraged to pursue my interests. She told me about a bunch of resources I didn't know about and was really approachable and interested in getting to know me and helping me succeed. 11/10.

So so helpful and kind! There are so many resources they provide

As I have never used it, I can't be satisfied or dissatisfied. I plan on getting in contact with them in the very near future, as I'm currently knee deep in researching internships.

I have not had bad experiences with the CCI, but found it frustrating that one of my friends was told she would receive info about funding in February when in reality it does not come out until April (she was told it was rolling). She was forced to accept an internship without knowing whether or not she will receive money from the school.
I would like more options for people interested in doing community based organizing and social justice work.

I think some areas of study are prioritized/ have more resources and opportunities than others.

I have never utilized said services.

Sometimes despite their efforts they can be unhelpful. For example, I went to them during my second year at Middlebury and I made an appointment with an advisor so that they could look at my cover letter and resume. Instead of helping me, although I had already gone to the effort of making an appointment, they referred me to another student. I came away wondering why, since I was already there, they wouldn't look at my resume, and would prefer that a perhaps less qualified student look at it instead.

The CCI has changed, improved, and added many more initiatives and activities to the office itself. The CCI does a lot in trying to reach out to students and engage with them as much as possible. Now it is really up to the students to respond and receive the help.

Probably should use this resource more.

I chose a random one, I've been in that building once

I think MOJO can be improved with the types of opportunities it showcases. For example, I stated my interest in the arts and it regularly emails me about opportunities for sports marketing because of my interest in "the arts" I don't get it ???

Often, the stigma is that the CCI expects a lot on the student when in fact we go there to seek guidance. Often the question is "Who do you know in that industry?" Well, if you have no connections, then why would I go in to meet with them?

Graduating in 4 Days, still don't have a job, sent about 60 MoJO applications

I've found the peer tutoring to be woefully inadequate, and responsible for giving me shoddy advice that may have impacted my ability to secure an internship. Furthermore, the office has lost documents that I've emailed them months prior.

When I've used the CCI, they've been great.

I wish there were more and easier-to-use resources besides just MOJO

I'm a studio art & art history major and the CCI does a very poor job and maintaing connections to graduates who now work in these fields. I know many graduated students who work at galleries and have never been contacted by the CCI. These galleries frequently have internship opportunities that current students could be applied for but are not made aware.

I am not aware of all the resources available.

They get the job done (no pun intended).

I haven't actually interacted with the people in the CCI at all, I think maybe if there was some event during orientation where we got to meet them, I would be more inclined to take advantage of what they offer.

There are very very few internships on MOJO for humanities majors. An econ major friend has worked a lot with the CCI and said MOJO/CCI resources are basically useless.. you can't contact any of the Midd alums through MOJO? I think Middlebury should take a look at how CCI's work in places like Bates. Students are required by Bates to do a summer internship and so they are forced to interact more with the CCI and the CCI is more invested in helping them. As a humanities major with literally no connections to get me a job, help with housing, etc I have failed every summer to find an internship.

Computer science job market is unique and there is no one at CCI specifically in touch with that world.

I never used the CCI.

There needs to be more job options for people who want to do social justice outside teaching and environmental issues. It's ridiculous.
I wish there were more resources and opportunities available to pre-vet students, rather than just pre-med.

People say the CCI is accessible but they always seem to direct me towards websites - if I understood the websites I wouldn't be sitting there trying to get explanations from people.

I have not yet used the CCI, so I do not have any comments as to their effectiveness.

It would be nice to have advisors focused on sending students abroad during the summer (I can't go abroad during the year due to sports). It would also be nice to have advisors focused in certain areas such as computer science.

I wish there were more STEM advisors.

There aren't many internships outside of finance or banking; resources or networking opportunities outside of these fields are pretty slim.

There needs to be a serious change regarding the pre-med selection committee. It is just used to boost Middlebury's stats and hurts the students by delaying them from applying to med school by a year. If I had known I was going to go to Med school I would not have gone to Middlebury and I have stopped being a tour guide.

There needs to be more funding for summer opportunities.

They rock and are great resources.

They need to have more opportunities posted.

I have yet to use the services and resources of the CCI.

CCI appointments with the advisors take long wait periods, and if you are struggling for a start for job/internship opportunities, they might not seem as supportive and approachable.

It's an important part of the college. Their website area is somewhat confusing. I don't know if I can get extra funding for an internship that is paid.

I think the deadlines for things like summer funding and internship credit could be revisited. In my experience, I've secured internship offers after CCI deadlines which then has caused me to miss valuable opportunities. Additionally, it would be great to revisit the rule that students can only apply for summer internship funding from CCI once. I know personally that I could have benefitted from funding multiple summers it able to apply.

More funding for summer experiences, broader spectrum of experiences supported.

Hannah Benz is an incredible human being and resource for students.

Not very many job postings.

I wish there were a wider range of jobs/internships available on mojo. And I wish internship funding could be applied to unpaid internships after graduation, especially if a student has never received this funding before.

They're very helpful and informative, and the frequent emails about what is going on are very helpful.

Understand that students of color don't have the same opportunities as white students and need MORE help when it comes to finding and being able to actually obtain them.

Ursula is handling the transition from Amherst to Middlebury phenomenally and with grace.

Need more info on niche subjects such as tech/software development! For instance: STEM should not still be an entire "industry" to the CCI, extremely varied in terms of pre-reqs, resume builders, interview styles, etc.

The CCI has very limited west coast options and that sometimes limits how much I feel supported by the center.

CCI has excellent pre-med services, but I found they were less able to help with students interested in graduate school or in biotechnology industries.

Wish there were more initiative to connect with students.

Career advisors are not very useful. The advisor I have met with knows only a little about the industry that I am interested (policy/government, which is directly related to Political Science and IPE, two of the largest majors on CCI has been helpful with connecting me to alumni but less helpful with reviewing cover letters and resumes and suggesting organizations to look for jobs at. The job listings on MOJO are tailored only to a small number of majors and interests. From what I've seen, there's an abundance of consulting, teaching, and medicine/biotechnology jobs.

Student resume helpers are useful, but the advisers themselves didn't share anything useful with me that I couldn't have found online...

could use more help with writing samples and MOJO is a shit show so I'd appreciate other options / aid using it

I haven't used CCI enough to have an opinion.

I have not interacted with the CCI frequently enough to form an opinion.

I would like a STEM advisor who doesn't just cater to bio and pre-med students. Or at least a contact or something. As a geology major, I don't really even look at the CCI except for funding opportunities because there never seem to be events catered towards what I am interested and I understand to an extent as I believe we are one of the smallest majors on campus but a little something would be nice. As is now, I rely on advice from professors and other students, as well as copious amounts of internet searching, to find internship and job openings.

My limited experiences have been very positive. And friends' experiences have been positive as well.

I think there needs to be greater available funding for student with high financial need.

I wish that MOJO was little easier navigate, and that the MiddNet system was likewise. But I have always found the CCI very easy to work with.

the CCI should give internship grants to students for multiple years, not just one. the CCI also needs to have a grand list of organizations and companies students can look into for internships, separated by field. This would allow students to do a lot of the grunt work, but give them a starting place. I am satisfied with the CCI's attention to my resume and cover letters, but very dissatisfied with their inability to know where I should be looking for my interests. I am interested in social justice, and they know very little about opportunities in that field. social impact does NOT equal social justice work and I think CCI thinks it does.

Really hard to schedule an appointment with the relevant advisor.

I am a film major and I feel that CCI resources are focused on helping students in other disciplines (such as those who want to go into business or finance). Film doesn't even have its own category. It is lumped into arts, which shares resources with media and communication.

CCI is very hit or miss. More helpful with big picture "I've never written a cover letter" then minutia of finding a job.

Because I'm interested in a field that Middlebury doesn't really offer academically (marketing) it can be more difficult to find opportunities for internships in that field. It would be great if there was more about getting involved in this type of career

They helped me with my resumé. other than that, haven't them much

Too much capitalist/entrepreneurial jobs, not enough social impact

For me it was good because I knew what I wanted to do but for my friends that are unsure of what they want to go into the CCI is unhelpful because you are required immediately to choose a preference.

I think the CCI does a great job, but I think that many students don't really know all of the CCI benefits.

It's hard for non-economics majors to have clear and direct advice/

They haven't helped much

I find the CCI does not do enough to accommodate opportunities for computer science majors. They do not provide much help with internships/jobs or with companies/recruiters.

They really want to help and ensure Middlebury students receive all the resources they need to be successful.
Why are so many resources devoted toward bringing exploitative companies like Goldman Sachs to campus? Why the hell is there a senior etiquette dinner? Why does this school spend so much of its energy oiling the pipeline for top 1% jobs and retaining some vague elitist alumni reputation?

I think the CCI should try to post more environmentally focused jobs/internships on MOJO

I have received funding and guidance every year in some capacity from the CCI, professionally I would not have my current standing without their help, especially coming from a first gen background where I had no one back home for advice.

No help for students pursuing architecture and design!

The CCI is honestly great. And like, I know they're concerned that not enough kids utilize it/know about it, but that's the kids' fault not the CCIs. The CCI has everything you would need and you're dumb if you never utilize it.

I found both my internship for last summer and my job for after graduation through Mojo/middnet and the cci

More help deciding what field may be best not but getting a job in one that you've chosen.

I wish that it were possible to apply for funding for a J-Term internship.

MOJO listings for internships can be inconsistent in the listings. Due dates can say January on one spot in the page and March on another.

It seems as though all the resources in the CCI are geared towards finance. There is very little guidance for journalism and publishing, and I can get much more out of looking up information online than from meeting with an advisor at the CCI.

More stuff besides finance please!

very helpful and friendly staff

It can be oddly intimidating to talk to another student with quick questions. It would be great if there were a staff person also available to help with simple resume/cover letter Qs etc

I haven't taken full advantage of what the CCI offers but my few interactions with an advisor have left me with pretty vague information and nothing really solid.

They have provided everything that I need

They need more social justice resources, resources on non-US countries, genuine help for international students that doesn't involve our being shuttled to ISSS (which is unfairly understaffed) for every question. CCI staff are wonderful, though.

The funding options are limited and do not make up the potential costs of living in most cities or the lost money we could have made doing a real job instead of an unpaid internship.

I find that the CCI and MOJO are really only helpful when you're looking for specific jobs in certain areas. Also, I went to a women's career panel that I had expected to be about career paths. Instead, it was a handful of seniors (including one senior male) talking about how they chose their majors. It was not helpful in the slightest and completely mis-advertized.

Too much focus on finance and consulting. Not enough knowledge of social impact careers.

There are a lot of resources for financial jobs, but very little support/information/help for anything humanities-related.

I like the career advising and peer sessions, as well as some of the events the CCI puts on. Sometimes I think there is a disconnect between students and the CCI and I know they are revamping services to help bridge that gap and more specifically target the needs of students. I like the idea of having every first year assigned an adviser or peer at the CCI initially to at least establish a connection, and then students can make appointments with other advisers later on, if that works better.

I think the CCI should be more active in facilitating connections between students and alumni. I also find it really disappointing that every time I go on MOJO, there are very few job postings listed in my area of interest.
resources are heavily focused on Boston, NYC, DC area and have few helpful resources for the west coast or other areas in the country.

They just tell you to stalk people on linkedin. They need to list more opportunities and have better resources.

When I went to ask for advice, I was just directed to the website.

More legal internships

There is way too much of a focus on economics and finance. The arts are severely lacking in terms of opportunities and on mojo. I feel that I am left in the open. There is also a smaller arts network.

For the industries I'm interested in, MOJO provided many options for me to apply through the website to different internships and jobs.

More funding for internships is important.

Provide more support to certain industries than others (e.g. Finance).

It would be nice to know more about what they offer and have more CCI sponsored events

I think they could do more student outreach than they do already, and provide more opportunities beyond finance.

It makes it extremely difficult to accept internships when you cannot be compensated for your internship, nor can you get academic credit for them during the fall/spring semester. Internship allow for a type of experiential learning that you cannot obtain in the classroom and must be better promoted and supported by the College/CCI

Their pre-med staff in particular needs help.

I've gotten my best internship guidance from other sources.

They gave me cash to do an internship. It was nice.

the resources at CCI only cater to a few career interest paths. given the breadth of majors at this LIBERAL ARTS college you'd think there would be more diversity in the resources and opportunities the CCI advertises. (ie. there is one counselor for 'social impact and environment jobs', compared to the multiple dedicated to finance careers)

Resume readers need higher standards.

More non-finance options on Mojo please!

From my experience, the CCI advisors spend too much time planning events that no one goes to and not enough time just sitting down with students and talking with them about their career ideas and thought processes about it. A lot of times when I've talked to CCI advisors they've been frantic and don't seem to have enough time to sit down and have a real, calm, and reflective conversation because they're so busy planning events.

The CCI's services are not relevant for Biology majors interested in ecology besides resume support and possibly funding: the bio department provides adequate, independent support for finding paid research opportunities

I have found the services at the CCI invaluable. Nadine Barnicle's organization of this fall's 'UpNext: Careers in Energy' was incredible. I am still leveraging connections that I made during that session. More please!

I have only visited the CCI once but they are extremely helpful. I'm only disappointed that the hours are shortened during J term.

Been told that technical interview support from the CCI is minimal for Computer Science students

There are not enough options available for international students. Nearly all the companies on mojo do not provide sponsorship.

Not sure what the CCI can help me with.

The CCI Stem and health advisors are the best thing at midd. Mary lothrop and Hannah benz are incredible.

I was able to complete a summer internship at Stanford thanks to funding from the CCI.
So far support has been good for what I've needed it for.

Needed more specific direction about jobs that someone in my field of study could possibly pursue.

Better funding for students with higher financial need.

The MOJO website is difficult to navigate.

This survey is hella long -.

I wish there were more internship opportunities.

One of the advisers I met with was discouraging and not particularly helpful. others have been great.

I have not used it much, but it seems useful.

Sometimes they seem unhelpful and I can see why people feel like they are. I normally just need emotional support to stop freaking out about the job search and it normally goes well.

They were very helpful with my resume.

The Peer Career Advisors have been very helpful in crafting my resume and I love all the events/info sessions the CCI holds to get out information about different opportunities we can take up.

I think that sometimes the advisors try to advise in such a way as to benefit Middlebury alum's acceptance rates into professional programs.

They have a very narrow focus, and send far too many emails.

CCI might consider diversifying; some complain that there are not enough opportunities represented for science majors.

Not directly the CCI's fault but I think it is absolutely ridiculous that you do not receive some tuition credit back for opting out of winter term to do internship that requires living off campus. Why do I have to pay for room and board for 4 weeks when I am not on campus?

I have not had enough interactions with the CCI and its resources to have an opinion on what it offers.

I feel like the CCI is pretty limited when it comes to low-income students who do not live in a city. I don't have a car that can help me take courses and pursue an internship in town during the regular semester, and when they found out that I don't live in the city, they suggested I ask my friends for housing. However, friendships and friend networks tend to form around racial groups and socio-economic status. If I can't afford housing in a certain place, friends are most likely unable to provide housing. The fact that my CCI advisor assumed I already had connections was frustrating, and I know of other students who have experienced the same.

There are good options, however I would prefer more science major advisors.

I didn't feel like I got a good sense of what resources the CCI provides when I came to Midd. A friend recently mentioned that they had looked over his resume and given him some pointers, and I was surprised that resume advice was available.

Haven't used the resources.

It is ridiculous that funding decisions are not released until April 27th. I need to give an answer to a company but I do not know yet if I will receive funding. Also, Middlebury should allocate more funds to grant students with unpaid internships so they can have spending money for the following year.

Summer funding is limited, wished the budget was larger.

have not used CCI

Information about upcoming events, internships, resources, etc. is incredibly poorly conveyed. Unless I'm subscribed to a certain list, I am very very unlikely to know what's going on. The CCI needs better integration with other services, better branding, and generally more know-how about how to enter/pursue popular paths (like UX Design)
I think that Middlebury has ample resources for those interested working in the private sector, particularly in the financial sector, but very limited opportunities in the public interest or governance.

I've always felt supported in my search

I know the CCI gets a bad rap, but I've had a lot of success with them. I've found multiple jobs/internships through them and go to their peer advising all the time.

I think there should be more internship postings on mojo for first year students and the hours should be expanded. However, I think the online resources are very helpful.

The CCI is very consulting- and finance-oriented, and could do more with students interested in other fields

I wish they were more helpful with resumes. I was just given general advice.

Mojo does not have many opportunities listed

The resources for first years is seriously insufficient, especially in comparison to what peers have at their schools. For example, I know of students who sit down with an advisor after taking a personality test to see what careers match their personalities. This would have been so helpful to me as I was very lost and not getting the information I needed as a first and second year. It took dating an older student to actually get my feet on the ground and know what to look for.

I feel that the CCI has a serious lack of support in STEM areas but that could just be my personal experience.

It doesn’t seem to provide enough opportunities and training for non finance jobs.

Have never used this service.

Sometimes the CCI is helpful (just listening & giving advice & resumes) BUT their support for some majors like art majors/IGS majors/etc is non-existent.

It is not a very welcoming office to go into and say hey I have no idea what to do with my life or where to start figuring that out-help.

Although I have not taken advantage of all of its resources, it seems to cover the gamut with what it offers.

-Someone needs to replace Don. Current lady doesn’t know what's good.

more options for shadowing doctors

I want to answer "yes" to the "Have you ever been unable to pursue or accept an internship opportunity?" but it was not due to economic issues, rather mental health ones

More exclusive to Middlebury internships please.

I have had great experiences with advisors who are knowledgable and can go beyond MOJO. I had a payment issue that was resolved, and the interns and staff are always friendly and helpful when I go in with a question without an appointment.

There seems to be good resources but when I go to CCI I don't get helpful guidance

I'm a pre-med and the health professions team is amazing. Seriously, Hannah Benz is a total rock star and literally everyone loves her. I am dissatisfied with the rest of the CCI, however, because they do not have enough resources for students that aren't pre-professional and don't want to go into investment banking or consulting.

Science advising is very focused on the health professions. Little guidance for pursuing other areas of biological research.

I got a job through mojo, wooh!

There needs to be better access to networking. Meetings should be required for all students. Also meetings need to be 1 hour long, nothing substantive can get done in 30 minutes and the advisors are always running late STEM career and internship advising is subpar. No career fairs or on campus recruiting for STEM.

They have always been helpful and informative when I needed them.

It's great if you use it - could bring some more technical internship / companies to campus they are very knowledgable and approachable

The CCI brings in interviewers and panels targeted solely at econ majors. There is little to no help in finding research science jobs or internships.

Hannah Benz is flat out the most helpful person that Middlebury employs.

When I was a first year, CCI had very limited resources on Mojo and were largely unhelpful for getting internships. Just this year, with the revamp of the Mojo website, the number of jobs and internships available have increased dramatically. This is a major improvement.

I find mojo pretty useless so it's annoying to me that when I ask for help finding internships they just tell me to use mojo.

It is great for people looking for jobs in NY or Boston, but I am looking for a job in SF and there are hardly any connections. I think CCI would benefit by increasing the geographic diversity of recruiting.

I met with a really great advisor, Ursula Olender. I also think the workshops/events are quite good.

Have not really used CCI resources.

I have utilized some of the CCI's resources but generally am still confused about what they can truly help me with.

There needs to be more funding for students from low income families. I've had to turn down two experiences because I could not secure sufficient funding from Middlebury.

The CCI really seems to have resources available for/know how to help people interested in going into finance, consulting, and medicine. I feel like social service and education careers are completely ignored.

They prioritize students interested in econ.

if you don't want to be a consultant or wall street scammer they don't have much

Please organize career fairs in which representatives/recruiters from companies and organizations can get to know Middlebury students. Many of my friends at other schools rely primarily on that to make connections and get interviews at companies.

I enjoy smaller group events, less informational style and more networking type events.

Better graduate school preparation. Better help at securing science internships.

Bio, and going abroad

The ability to connect with and get funding for internships. Resume building. Interviews. Careers counseling. Basically every service and program, to be honest.

Resources for queer students

Alums within my interested industry sector!

Public health, resumé help, advising

I don't really know what they offer but i would like to set up an appointment with them to see how they can help me out.

Speakers and info/help sessions

I would love to see more artists and writers come to the CCI to help students. I feel like currently many of the networking opportunities offered are for students who want to go into finance.

Resume/cover letter advice, funding for internships, networking with alums/job opportunities

Excel tutoring

It would be useful to meet with a counselor at the CCI as part of orientation so that each student has an established relationship with the CCI from the beginning.

Internship workshops, career counseling

STEM/prehealth program

Teaching opportunities abroad

Funding opportunities, and the CCI advisor with their networks and career advice.

More info about potential jobs/majors in my area of interest
Even more help getting internships during the summer. These are critical to post-grad career/education viability and yet students are kind of dropped into the black hole of MOJO and expected to fend for themselves.

On-campus recruiting Resume and cover letter reviews Job postings

Tech - STEM... more big tech companies in SF rather than all finance consulting in NYC

I think it would be really cool to have a student peer to peer mentoring program. Maybe split by major, upperclassmen could sign up to be a mentor, and have an underclassman as their mentee. This way, students could share their experiences in finding internships and jobs in their field, as well as other opportunities, and give advice (such as whether to apply to graduate school, cool fellowships, how to get funding from resources on campus, how to think of a thesis) that professionals at the CCI just don't have access to.

Studio Art based internships listed.

Basic resume reviewing workshops, how to write a cover letter, basic things like that. I once went to a workshop on how to use Linkedin that I found helpful.

Bring more alums to campus Cover letter writing workshops

Info sessions about certain career fields

I know the Community Engagement center already exists but maybe some more resources engaging with social work and education? I think the CCI is already doing its job.

I'd like more information about health careers other than med school (e.g. nursing). There's tons of information regarding getting into medicine, but very little information for students interested in other parts of healthcare.

Information about the steps I need to take for dental school

Interview practice, resume review, on campus recruitment events

Maybe mock interviews

I don't think they offer a "professional email" seminar- just how to write professionally, what sorts of openings and closures to use, that sort of thing. That would be a big help for emailing internship opportunities, etc.

Response to the question above: A major problem with CCI is that it limits it's services to helping in these VERY LIMITED industries. We need to open up how the marketing is framed so that students with interests outside of these industries can find resources and help.

Real estate expertise

Meet alumni events, informational events on varying job types

Career advising, panels of alumni with the same major/interests, workshops or sessions to combine social impact with science

More events meeting alumni

An art and design specific resource. Creating a unique resume.

Internship opportunities and grant options!

More global health and alternative career options.

Health Professions

Anything not about finance

Shadowing health professionals, or being able to watch surgeries
Cover letter help

Would want to see more long-term psych opportunities in bigger cities. not just on the east coast make the CCI more accessible to the student body. i feel so unsure of walking in there and honestly have no idea what they even do. website is not very up to date networking that could lead to a real job

Bring in cool people to talk about their jobs - not just doctors, stock brokers, and whatever other typical careers Midd focuses on, but more funky careers that people wouldn't otherwise think about.

Programs that help you figure out what you want to do with your life!!!

shadowing programs- but I feel as though that's not an option for me

resume building workshop

Locating job boards for a wide variety of fields

More health, more ES!!!

STEM career advisors

they literally have no information about science research and engineering (aside from bio/health professions)

List of organizations that even though it's not posted on MOJO, we can still learn about

Programs that are useful but not as competitive.

Alumni panels/presentations in each of the aforementioned industries to network and understand how Midd grads have adjusted to a career post-graduation.

A shadow program that connect Midd students to alumni or other professionals during J-term or study aborad ter,

STEM is a hilarious oversimplification. If you want to know what people want to do split it up into "Science Research" and "Engineering / Computer Engineering type of thing I'm not a computer person"

Internship search workshops. Especially for those who don't have the entire summer or J-Term available for a "formal" internship.

I've been very inspired by people that have worked in a variety of field over their life. It would be great if there was a speaker or some kind of a panel where we could hear from people that have diverged from the typical success-oriented-one-path-only professional life, but still feel satisfied.

The Cici I should not cancel activities such as etiquette dinner the day of when people have purchased these tickets knowing that during J term it is a good time to go. They should refund our money. Instead they just said vaguely that it's been postponed for the time being for the spring semester which is guaranteed to be busier than jterm.

on-campus interviews, career counseling,

More funding for summer classes ect.
