I'm always wary in the presence of drunk men.

Walking alone, I understand that the community itself is pretty open (no gates), and it gets dark quite quickly. So sometimes if I am coming back from the gym or the library late at night alone, it can feel a bit unsafe.

Even though I feel that the Middlebury campus itself is a safe place, as a female I am still aware of cases of sexual assault that occur on this campus. In that sense I can't say that I am 100% comfortable walking alone at night especially if alcohol is involved.

Atwater parties make me feel very unsafe. They are a predatory environment and I think something should be changed to make them safer.

Sometimes the sidewalks are not very well lit.

More lights and blue lights around campus especially battell beach

I think campus can use more lighting at night time

The campus is not well lit so when walking alone it is hard to see who is around.

Drunk guys being aggressive

It's cold as shit and I don't want to freeze to death (I'm a Florida resident.)

I can imagine feeling unsafe on campus if I were a POC because I've heard PubSafe has some pretty discriminatory practices, e.g. Forcing black students to present ID randomly

Just being in town at night anywhere can feel a little less than totally safe - I never feel as though I'm at risk of being hurt or harassed, but I do feel like I should not linger too long with my friends unless we are at a restaurant, the movies, etc.

I feel unsafe at night off campus because Midd Rides runs infrequently and is not reliable and there are a lot of people from the town that mix with the college students at the bar near campus and near the Marquis that contribute to an overall unsettling feeling around off campus.

I don't know, it's probably just my fear of being sexually assaulted. Fourth times a charm around here, right?

I often feel like I will be kicked out.

If someone feels unsafe here they must be afraid of the dark.

I just think there are not a lot of people around and it could take one person to abduct me on my run and I don't check in consistently with anyone so if I was missing it could take a while for it to be noticed. I think there should be more of the blue lamps on campus and more street lights around Middlebury.

People drive so fast coming up to the crosswalks.

If I am walking alone at night and I don't see anyone or I see a group of men/ just one man in my vicinity.

I've been catcalled on campus while walking home from the gym at night - not pleasant, but a consequence of occupying space with men.

- Drunken misbehavior is always a concern

We live in Vermont. Theres literally nobody around us. I dont get this.

prior experience living in the city makes me distrustful, being a person of color and getting looks from drivers

The times I feel unsafe are at parties when I am isolated from the crowd.

Walking to the EMT station in the dark. Middrides should expand their range a bit. Better lighting on campus is needed.

Party spaces, particularly those dominated by male athletes, make me feel highly unsafe. Since the election, walking on the streets past dark has felt less safe.
It's eerie at night.

When I walk around campus at night on the weekends (and even within the dorm at night on weekends), I feel slightly unsafe because most people I encounter are in large party groups and/or under the influence, and I mistrust these situations but avoid interacting with people during this time.

For the most part, I feel physically safe (except at some parties occasionally), but being on campus makes me feel emotionally/mentally unsafe because of the stress/anxieties/depression it induces.

Drunk guys.

as a woman, men scare me always :)))

I don't think that the campus is very well lit at night

I had an experience where a Vermont local in a truck followed my friends and I while we were driving back to campus. This is the only time I have ever felt unsafe in this area, but we immediately called pubsafe, who came to the rescue within a few minutes.

One time a guy in town tried to take photographs of me around 5pm. Ever since, I've been more wary of my surroundings at night.

Nighttime is occasionally scary

It’s cold and if something happened while I was alone it could be bad.

I have felt "somewhat" safe for the majority of my 4 years, but recently I have noticed how unappropriately boys (boys, not men) on this campus behave i.e. sexual misconduct. Not just how they speak about women (for example, referring to them as "asking for it" or "rape-bait") but also how they treat them, trying to take certain physical actions too far in both situations of sobriety and those under the influence. I recently discovered how badly everyone needs refreshers on acceptable behavior in this community.

sexual assault and stalking

I usually feel safe, but have had a few weird experiences at night alone near Twilight and the beginning of town. I've been catcalled a couple times, and had someone throw an egg at me once, and an ear of corn another time (this was around the time that someone was going around throwing things at other students too). And one time I found someone stumbling around in the grass in front of Twilight and then the road on a Monday night. They seemed very intoxicated and I was afraid they'd get hit by a car, so I called public safety

N/A

Just the general unease of being in a very sparsely populated space when off campus where I'm not sure where I would go if something happened, even just petty crime.

concerns about outsiders gaining access to residence halls at night

The path from library to twilight is very dark, no lampposts

Sexual/physical assault at night because I am female and unable to defend myself.

The lack of people walking around on campus on week nights makes me a little uneasy, but not sure how that problem can really be prevented.

The blue lights on campus are very spaced out, and that makes me feel very unsafe at night. I also feel like the town does not welcome college students and especially students that are not white Americans or white passing.

Campus is not well-lit enough at night!

the way men in town look at me makes me uncomfortable sometimes

The party/rape culture on this campus is extremely unsafe, I think there should be more conversations on campus about sexual assault and also more promotion of a healthier drinking/drug culture plus more resources for students struggling with those issues.
I have been sort of assaulted before when I was alone and I'm always scared of that at night

Having townies randomly start conversations with you that usually center around "where are you from?" because they want to hear a certain answer (ex: somewhere in Latin America). This has happened to me at least 3 times sophomore year. Had a crazy townie follow me and my 3 friends, 2 of whom are black, asking us if we supported BLM. We ran away. This was in a parking lot at Shaws at night on a Saturday.

I'm constantly afraid of someone with a gun showing up on campus and opening fire - there have been too many school shootings in the last years

I used to feel a lot less safe on campus. I'm not really sure what changed, but I'm a lot more comfortable now than I was a year ago.

I've had some weird encounters with men in the community that have made me question my safety.

It is really cold and I am nervous that I will jeopardize my health or fall on ice walking home, and I rarely get through to Middrides

Being in any town at night requires extra caution considering public safety or Middrides are not driving around outside of campus limits.

Dark streets at night off campus. Nothing to do about it, really..

A lot of party spaces aren't safe spaces for women or POCs. A lot of guys on this campus are very predatory and party spaces like Atwater and Tavern often encourage predatory behavior. While I feel safe on this campus, a lot of people don't, and it's not just an issue of having more PubSafe officers. We need a broader cultural change on campus that holds people accountable for sexual assault.

Showing any part of my LGBTQ community

its really just being in the dark, and i am unsure of surrounding people

Tangential, but my stuff was stolen in broad daylight during move-in day because Middlebury decided to do construction campus-wide that day, allowing most gates to be opened and the amount of non-campus affiliated people to increase on the day when most belongings are in the process of being moved out of their dorms. I suggest that move-in day should be an isolated event, with no other events scheduled on that day to reduce the amount of strangers on campus.

There are many unlit patches on campus, and very few of those blue station things. I literally only know of the one near bihall.

As a POC I feel unsafe sometimes for obvious reasons.

No personal experience, but I would not feel comfortable walking around campus late at night for long distances especially on the weekends.

Given the current political situation in this country I feel very unsafe being a Mexican Woman here on campus knowing that some people have already directly expressed their negative feelings towards me. Also the school is pretty dark at night

It's dark and my imagination goes awry.

I'm just afraid of dark, so at night I get a little more nervous especially if I am alone.

I have been catcalled multiple times in town during daytime hours. It has always been from moving vehicles.

I feel like the police are out to get the college students

Ignorant behavior by some of the people in town. For example: one of the waiters at Taste of India would shine a red lazer at any minority student walking around town.

Walking at night alone through town can be nerve wracking. It would be awesome if MiddRides could pick students up beyond Two Bros!

Confederate flags places that are not immediately in the town of Middlebury (i.e. College Street)

Walking alone late at night near the road, when people can catcall

Sexual assault

Often times I feel unsafe at night when there aren't a lot of other people around. Some areas of campus are also very dark, such as behind the Ross complex and near the biomass plant.

I know there has been a situation with townspeople stalking students so walking home alone at night is occasionally scary

I wouldn't want to walk around town alone late at night, but I would feel safe if I had a few friends with me.

Been called names/yelled at by seemingly drunk male presenting people multiple times - other experiences in this vein of gendered interactions

Wish the roads into town were better lit.

At night, there tend to be less people around campus and in the surrounding community, so I feel, if something did happen, there would not be anyone around to notice or to help.

As a POC I feel that, even though people in town are very nice, I subconsciously fear rural americans based on media representation about race relations in rural areas. Im essentially scared that I will be hurt physically by someone

As a paranoid New Yorker and a hispanic woman, the fear never goes away.

it's too dark with not enough lighting. there have been stalkers in town so that is a little scary heard experiences from friends of weird/ creepy stalkers from town who came onto our campus and found them in the library

Town people coming on campus.

There is just so much open space and the buildings aren't super close together. It is harder to want to leave your building at night when other places are so far away, not just cold but the lonely trek sucks.

N/A

well i know a girl who had to leave midd permanently because she was stalked by a homeless man for months... so that's why i feel unsafe.

Despite green dot efforts, rape culture is very prevalent on this campus and the binge drinking culture only fuels the former. Sometimes, I feel my personal safety is threatened when a large group of guys are walking through a hallway or outside in my direction and are being rowdy but most times they usually keep their rowdiness to themselves and don't bother me, but there have been some instances of catccalling and other power moves that bold guys make for the sake of humiliating women and making them uncomfortable.

There isn't enough lighting on all streets that have student housing in the night. The street with interest houses behind the library is pretty dark. It doesn't feel safe walking on such streets.

At night on campus I sometimes have the fear that drunk students will assault me

There is an insufficient amount of lighting around certain areas of the campus.

After bar night it can be a little sketch to walk home.

Really do feel safe 99% of the time here (I'm a white male), but I did get called at in town once because I was holding hands with another male. But I do realize that that's not a huge thing.

In the community surrounding campus (nighttime) - there is no campus security around.

I am scared of the dark and my dad is in law enforcement so I was taught to be hyper- vigilant.

I have had a few instances in the past of a guy or group of guys following me back to campus from town and yelling/saying misogynistic and generally unwelcome statements as the come closer.
Lighting, lack of blue lights, I live near the edge of campus and do not feel safe walking at night to or from bihall

Other drunk students walking at night

I actually spoke about this with a friend, but we would never feel safe going to town at night because there's sketchy people and no security.

Middrides has literally never picked up the phone when I need a ride.

N/A

The community around Middlebury can be a little too quiet and raises suspicion.

Racial profiling is real on campus and just people who have no manners.

Townspeople at night have harassed me on 5 separate occasions through my 5 semesters at Midd. They cat call me and follow me as I'm walking through town back to campus at night after events at 51 Main (all poetry readings, not any bar nights).

I feel safe at night on campus because I do not place myself in situations where I would feel unsafe, like parties throw by varsity sports teams or certain social houses

More blue emergency lights. I often can't see a blue light standing next to another, which is one of the points of the emergency lights.

Need more lights on campus

Some of the streets aren't very well lit, and so at times it can feel a little eerie at night.

Sometimes people drive while drunk (I've seen people throw beer cans in the road while recklessly driving at night).

As a black male, it is rather threatening to see cars driving around with the confederate flag hanging out their windows or on stickers on the back of their cars. It makes me worry that potentially one day I could find myself in an unfortunate situation because of it.

Political stress

I've heard friends being called racist things while in town.

Lone woman walking at night on a college campus, especially on a weekend. Do I need to say more? Perhaps it's paranoia, but still.

I think just knowing that it's nighttime makes me feel somewhat unsafe. Especially on the weekends when I know students have been drinking but never have felt super unsafe

More lighting between town and campus at night, particularly through the field, would be helpful

Atwater parties are rape-y

My friends have told me about people in town being racist toward them, and I find that I don't know the community outside of campus very well. Additionally, I've been harassed at night when walking alone on campus, typically on weekend nights by groups of guys.

I'm a survivor of sexual assault. I have a really hard time walking alone by myself at night. There are places on campus that are not well lit.

Late at night on edges of campus can feel deserted. We need more blue lights!

Drunk men that may heckle or hassle me while I'm walking

Some parts of campus are very dark

Walking into town at night, I feel unsafe
Stalkers in town of Middlebury
