JERSEY CITY, NJ, March 1, 2016—Mana Contemporary, one of the largest and most exciting cultural centers in the U.S., announces the addition of “Saturdays at Mana” to its free public programming. Beginning on March 12, 2016, Mana will open on Saturdays from 12PM to 6PM. Select exhibitions will be on view for self-guided tours each Saturday, and participating artists will open their studios. The Mana Café will be open for refreshments.

Since opening in a former tobacco factory in 2011, the Jersey City arts institution—recently named one of the “10 Top Private Museums in the U.S.” by Artnet—has rapidly established itself as an international player in the art world. While tens of thousands of visitors attend Mana’s quarterly open houses and weekday guided tours each year, the addition of Saturday hours will ensure Mana’s programs reach an even wider audience. Mana events are free and open to all ages.

For March 2016, exhibitions in rotation are as follows:

March 12: Here’s Looking Back At You: Images of Woman from the Eileen S. Kaminsky Family Foundation (ESKFF) Collection, curated by Saul Ostrow, addresses female agency and identity, and The T’ang Horse: Anthony Quinn, curated by Ysabel Pinyol, offers an intimate look at the late actor’s legacy through the lens of his own art works and art collection. There will also be a screening of a film featuring Anthony Quinn in the theater at 2PM.

March 19: Made In California: Selections from the Frederick R. Weisman Art Foundation covers two floors of gallery space, presenting a star-studded selection of contemporary West Coast art from the 1950s to the present.

March 26: Ayn Foundation Presents: Arnulf Rainer is a core selection of cross and angel paintings by Austria's most famous contemporary artist, and Here's Looking Back At You: Images of Woman from the Eileen S. Kaminsky Family Foundation (ESKFF) Collection, with a special Q&A with curator Saul Ostrow at 3PM.
