“Do you always photograph building like this?” asked one architect, when visiting Pete McCutchen’s studio at the Torpedo Factory Art Center, seeing his GEOMETRICS series in progress.

“I photograph everything like this.”

Isolated, abstracted, vibrant colors and a surrealistic touch. That is the signature style of Pete McCutchen, displayed in his show GEOMETRICS.

Shot in a three day period in a two block radius in Las Vegas Nevada, McCutchen was fascinated by the other-worldly nature of what he saw -- and so he chose to focus tight, cutting away at the context, making it appear even more surreal.

“Two elements fascinated me,” says McCutchen. “First were the geometric figures -- lines, circles, rectangles, triangles. I shot these images to highlight that, to make it seem more angular, more technological, colder. And the second was color, particularly as it related to reflective surfaces. Bright blue sky, the glow of neon lights, harsh sunlight. Built of a highly reflective material, the very same building could look completely different, depending on the time of day and ambient light conditions.”

Bold, original, graphic. McCutchen’s GEOMETRICS series is not to be missed.
