Childhood Summer Institute
Special Guests – Week 1

Work experience
The second stage of the Princess’ long-term educational programme began in January 2006 with work experience at the headquarters of UNICEF in New York.

While there she worked with and learned more about issues relating to humanitarian work, which she had prepared for by studying Ethnology and Modern History.

The Princess focused on areas of work that included:
- Children in institutional care
- Children in areas of conflict and vulnerability
- Sexually exploited children

While carrying out her work experience in New York, Princess Madeleine has been involved in information days at the UN headquarters in New York and participated in conferences, including one in Minneapolis on issues relating to support to programmes for sexually exploited girls.

She has also participated in the follow-up stage of projects in the Bronx, New York, which included an educational project for young mothers who have been sexually abused, and a trafficking project.

The Princess’ work with World Childhood Foundation in autumn 2006 included some project follow-up work in Ukraine and St Petersburg.

Continued studies and work at the World Childhood Foundation
Princess Madeleine worked at the World Childhood Foundation’s head offices in Stockholm in 2007, as she did during autumn 2006. In the spring of 2007 she continued her postgraduate studies at Stockholm University’s Department of Social Work on the subject of "Children’s Rights in Society". Her studies continued in autumn 2007 with a university course in child psychology.

In 2008, the Princess continued with both her work at the World Childhood Foundation and her university studies. She participated with the Queen in the Third World Congress Against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, which took place in Brazil. The Princess carried on with her studies and her work at the World
Childhood Foundation in spring 2009. Her work at the World Childhood Foundation continued into autumn 2009 and took her to the World Childhood Foundation in the United States. She carried out project visits in New York and San Francisco, and attended seminars and symposiums.

Since the autumn of 2010, the Princess has been involved in the World Childhood Foundation’s work to coordinate humanitarian efforts and projects, such as activities to prevent human trafficking and sexual exploitation of young girls, visiting work to raise public awareness of these matters and collection work.

As Chief Technology Officer, Joe Constantine leads Ericsson North America’s products, solutions, and industry strategy.

Constantine is a seasoned global telecom executive with a strong business and technical background including extensive direct customer engagement. He has a deep understanding of the wireless industry including evolution of the technology, business landscape and strategies, and customer needs. Constantine has been with Ericsson since 2000 and has held a variety of leadership positions in Europe, Asia and North America. Prior to his roles in North America, he was Vice President and Chief Technology Officer of Ericsson Korea.

Before joining Ericsson, Constantine was Founder and CEO of JCE Consulting, which provided IT and Professional Training Services to academic institutions. Earlier in his career he held a variety of sales positions in Europe and taught at the Royal Institute of Technology in Stockholm, from which he holds a Master’s Degree in Engineering.

Constantine is a strong proponent of sustainability and actively supports Ericsson’s global sustainability program, where a connected world is a basic human right.
Katherine Stewart is team lead for the EIU's Public Policy practice in London. She joined the team in 2012 and is responsible for designing and overseeing benchmarking and policy analysis projects. She has an expertise in security and human rights issues, including nuclear, child protection, and environmental, health and economic security. Katherine has led the Out of the Shadows Index since its inception.

She also leads the Nuclear Threat Initiative's Nuclear Security Index, has worked with the Instituto Alana on analyzing child-directed advertising and was part of the No Ceilings Initiative assessing the progress of women and girls since the 1995 Beijing Platform for Action on behalf of the Clinton Foundation and the Gates Foundation.

Ayesha Khan is an Analyst for the EIU's Public Policy practice in New York. She has worked on a variety of engagements in her two years with the team, including benchmarking indices to assess progress across developmental goals. She has expertise in development economics, financial inclusion, child protection, and energy and environmental issues. Ayesha is the Lead Analyst on the Out of the Shadows Index.
High energy, entrepreneurial executive, Katelyn N. Brewer, is passionate about empowering people, organizations, and communities to enhance the impact of social movements. As President & CEO of Darkness to Light, the nation’s leading advocate for the prevention of child sexual abuse, her expertise in transforming organizational cultures, achieving programmatic scale, and implementing behavior change communication lends invaluable insight to the larger conversation of child protection as a collective adult responsibility.

Since 2016, Katelyn’s leadership has resulted in exponential growth in programmatic reach and increased standing as a chief influencer in the space of child safety. Through education, advocacy, and research, Darkness to Light continues to revolutionize the way society keeps children safe from abuse.

Previous to Darkness to Light, Katelyn was Chief of Operations for Washington, D.C. based Children of Fallen Patriots, a foundation committed to supporting the children of military veterans, with a focus on increasing transparency and accountability. Prior to that, Brewer worked with Africare as Director of Strategic Engagement, managing Johannesburg-based programmatic activity and regional business development initiatives for Southern and Eastern Africa.

Katelyn’s dedication to innovation, emerging technologies, and cross-team alignment empower nonprofits to achieve critical social goals. Her work has resulted in sustainable change for communities, both nationally and internationally. Katelyn continually demonstrates that grassroots community initiatives lay the groundwork for organizations to expand their missions globally.

Katelyn is a graduate of Wheaton College in Boston, MA with a bachelor’s in International Relations and French. She lives in Charleston, SC, with her spouse.
Glen Pounder serves as Chief Operating Officer for Child Rescue Coalition, a nonprofit organization which helps rescue children from sexual abuse by providing technology to law enforcement (free of charge) to track, arrest and prosecute child predators. He acts as the organization’s liaison with national and international law enforcement partners, to expand the use of CRC’s cutting-edge tool — Child Protection System (CPS) Technology — and child protection data product offerings globally.

Prior to joining Child Rescue Coalition, Glen worked in law enforcement for more than 30 years. Throughout his career, he has undertaken numerous investigative and team leadership roles, in the United Kingdom and many other countries, focused on combatting child abuse and against the top echelons of serious crime.

Glen is fluent in Portuguese and recently completed a Master’s degree in Internet Law and Policy from the University of Strathclyde, Scotland.

Britta Holmberg is the Deputy Secretary General and Program Director at World Childhood Foundation. At Childhood she oversees the work to prevent abuse and sexual exploitation of children in thirteen countries and coordinates the program work with Childhood foundations in US, Brazil and Germany. She has a Master’s degree in Child and Youth Science and has also studied Eastern European Sciences and Slavonic languages. Before joining Childhood she worked at Swedish International Development Agency (Sida). She also has long experience as project manager, mainly in the area of development of social work with vulnerable families and children in Russia, at the Department for Social Work, Stockholm University.
Vicky Rateau is a programme officer for the Prevention of Child Sexual Abuse team, focused on creating safer environments for children in digital and sports environments. More specifically, she is developing a strategy for holding tech companies accountable for online child sexual abuse and changing paradigms around child athletes in the U.S.

Vicky comes to Oak with more than 20 years of campaign experience. Most recently, she had a campaign consulting firm in Washington, DC, whose clients included U.S. progressive organizations, foundations, and international anti-poverty organizations. Prior to that, Vicky managed high profile, priority, public engagement campaigns for Oxfam for 15 years (in the U.S. and globally). The focus of the campaigns was to change policies, norms, and practices at companies, multilateral institutions, and governments for climate justice, fair trade, and food security. Vicky has also been a union organizer, trainer of campaign planning skills, and co-leader of a campaign in defense of civil rights in higher education.

Aditya is a high school student studying in grade 10 at International School of Bangkok (ISB). He was born in New Delhi, India in August 2004, however, he spent the majority of his life in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia and Bangkok, Thailand, barring a year-long stint in Mussorie, India.

He has been a part of multiple projects on Child Online Protection (COP) in 2020. In April 2020, he contributed to a consultation commissioned by International Telecommunication Union (ITU), United Nations lead agency on ICT by its COP team to discuss the new Guidelines. He is extremely passionate about having a safer, better internet for all people, and has read and written considerably on the subject of misinformation and fake news on the internet.

He has also given several interviews on the subject of child online protection, to national channels in both India and Malaysia, speaking on Doordarshan Live (Indian State Broadcaster), and Bernama in Malaysia. Aditya has also written over 150 answers on the question-answer site called Quora, where he writes about various issues ranging from politics, international relations, and internet safety. His content has over 400 readers and 300k+ views on his content on the site.

Aditya is also an environmentalist and has participated in various community led programs which aim at protecting the environment.
These include Panya Project, a sustainable-living habitat in the Northern Mountains of Thailand. Aditya has also written a short thesis on E-waste and how to handle the growing crisis. He has also worked with Refugee Children in Thailand with the UNHCR’s ISB charter.

He is also an avid reader, having read hundreds of books on various subjects and have keen interest in political affairs, economics aspects and world history. Aditya is also a debater for his school’s debate team, having taken part in the team’s push to third place in the 2020 IASAS (Interscholastic Association of Southeast Asian Schools) Debate tournament last March. He loves photography and mountaineering.

My name is Davi Lennon and I am a sophomore at Vanderbilt University from New York City. At Vanderbilt, I am majoring in Economics and History and minoring in Business. From 2017 to 2018, I interned with the World Childhood Foundation. Now, I continue advocating for children's rights, safety, and happiness by serving on the executive committee for Vanderbilt Dance Marathon, an organization that fundraises for the local children's hospital Monroe Carrel Jr.