Throughout American history, Black women have mobilized against societal inequality, working to advance racial justice on behalf of themselves, their children, families and communities.

The many challenges faced by Black women exist at the intersections of identity and despite being at the center of the struggle for racial and gender equality, their issues are frequently ignored.

In our current moment, Black women are once again poised to be forefront of those impacted by policies that target communities of color and women.
HER DREAM DEFERRED elevates the issues confronting Black women and girls that are often cast into the shadows of public concern.

In honor of Women’s History Month and the third year of the UN’s International Decade for People of African Descent, AAPF, CISP, and the Hammer Museum host the third annual Her Dream Deferred series to elevate the crisis facing Black women and girls.

Each day from March 27-31 tune in online or join us in person for select events to highlight a specific set of challenges facing Black women and other women of color.

“The EMPOWERMENT of BLACK WOMEN constitutes the empowerment of our ENTIRE COMMUNITY.”

- Kimberlé Williams Crenshaw,
