Imperial Encounters in Russian History will include scholarly monographs, collections, and theoretical works which discuss Russia as a multi-peopled, multi-confessional, and multi-ethnic imperial space. Topics will include the interactions between and among religions, nations, and ethnicities, and between them and the state, quotidian encounters, population transfers, borderlands and frontiers, and mappings and cultural geographies. This series will conceptualize the structure and complexities of empire, especially over the last three centuries.
