

Form Submission - Emoji

Name: Emma McGorray

Do you use Emoji in typical conversation with friends? If so, do they ever replace written words? : Love a good emoji. I would say they only replace written words when I'm going for a ~funky humorous~ vibe

Do you feel Emoji capture and communicate ideas that traditional language cannot?: In some ways yeah! I think they definitely add to written language and allow you to communicate your tone and emotion in ways that regular text on its own couldn't do

Do you use Emoji to identify/connect with certain cultural groups or communities?: not really

Are there contexts where you are significantly more/less likely to use Emoji?: Definitely more likely to use emojis when I'm trying to show my mood, not likely to use emojis when the other person isn't using emojis.

Do you think Emoji have expanded or reduced linguistic capabilities in any way?: I dont think they've reduced capabilities--I think they make textual communication more understandable

Are there certain Emoji which have a personal or hidden meaning for you? If so, would you share a few?:

Any other thoughts?: I participated in a study about how emoji use affects perception of a text message once. No idea what the results were but I would guess there is probably some interesting psychological literature on the topic

(Sent via Stride and Saunter)