Come discover our world...
Have you ever dreamed of visiting an authentic fishing community located on a small island off the wilderness coast of British Columbia? Have you ever imagined walking the boardwalks of a busy working coastal town that proudly celebrates its First Nation and Pioneer heritage? Would you like to see a community where memorial and other totem poles and modern hospital, school and other facilities comfortably share the skyline? Can you picture a jumping-off place to explore the 500 nearby islands of the Broughton Archipelago, or to see wild orca, humpback, minke whales and more? The ‘Namgis First Nation and the Village of Alert Bay invite you to just such a place...Alert Bay on Cormorant Island.

When you get here...
Everyone remarks about our friendliness and the pride we have in our community. We are home to the world renowned U’mista Cultural Centre, First Nation cultural demonstration in the famed ‘Namgis Bighouse, and the world’s tallest totem (and 23 other totems). We've carved 16 kilometers of accessible trails out on the ‘wild side’ of our island...no resident bears, cougars or wolves guaranteed. Then there's our historic downtown, main street boardwalks and two boat harbours to explore. Rent a bike, visit a gallery, hike our beaches or trails, drink the best water in the world... or just relax and soak up our extraordinary wilderness setting and unique island culture. We would be very happy to be your hosts!

From earliest memory...
Cormorant Island has been a traditional home of the ‘Namgis First Nation from time out of mind. From 1870 onward Alert Bay became the dominant trading and service centre for residents of scores of nearby logging camps and First Nation communities in the North Vancouver Island region. As North Vancouver Island’s oldest municipality, Alert Bay continues to honour its past, while at the same time maintaining a full range of modern services. Today, Cormorant Island is home to a diverse population of 1,300 who share a vibrant and unique cultural environment.
