Movements go through life cycles, just like people, groups and congregations do. Our work requires rigorous politic and discernment to understand the current moment and how we can show up to meet the demands of our times.

Think about a time when you were personally transformed. What did it look and feel like?

What did it require for you to do? to let go of?

Think about a time when a group, organization or congregation you are part of was transformed. What did it look and feel like?

What did it require for the collective group to do? to let go of?
What is your assessment of the moment in your town/city/county?

Have you experienced transformation by organizations, congregations or community groups in this political moment?

If so how can or how would this transformation equip your group to better meet the times of resistance and mobilization we are living in?
