COMPAS Mission & Vision

Mission
COMPAS delivers creative experiences that unleash the potential within all of us.

Vision
Minnesota thrives when all of us have access to creative opportunities that enrich lives and communities.
Dear COMPAS friends,

What an amazing year this has been! We have a lot of exciting news to share with you, and all of it is a direct result of your support.

Thanks to you, 57,000 Minnesotans - people across the state who represented at least three different generations - experienced the joy of creativity this year. They painted, produced original music, explored spoken word poetry, made 3D dioramas, danced, wrote poems, and much more. Each one of them turned their thoughts, feelings, and experiences into works of art that expressed their unique creative vision.

The COMPAS manifesto, which is, essentially, the organization’s belief system (it can be found on our website at compas.org) states that creativity is precious, essential, elemental, and life-giving. It’s also healing, which is particularly needed right now as the world enters the third year of the COVID pandemic. This era is, of course, made even more difficult by additional challenges like climate change, rising inequalities, social injustice, and the struggle to find health and balance in our lives. Fortunately, research has shown time and again that the arts and engaging in acts of creativity are healing, particularly during times of crisis, confusion, and unrest. Being creative helps us understand and process challenges that feel overwhelming or insurmountable. It reminds us that we’re not alone and that we’re sharing a universal human experience.

We don’t think it’s a coincidence that this year, during this challenging time, site programming increased significantly in almost all COMPAS program areas, some by as much as 126 percent! Clearly, there was a widespread desire for the healing power of creativity. And because of your support, we were able to meet that pressing need.

We warmly encourage you to read all of this report, because we know you’ll be inspired. On each page, you’ll see evidence of how you are fueling artistry that heals and connects. You are bringing to life a vision for a renewed, refreshed, and reinvigorated world. And you’re providing sorely needed comfort for children, teens, and adults across Minnesota.

This work has never been more important. Thank YOU for making it possible!

Creative experiences improve mental health for the most vulnerable: children and adolescents

You’ve probably heard that mental health crises among children and adolescents are on the rise. The pandemic, school closures, financial hardships, and social isolation have unleashed a cascade of negative emotions in many students — from fear and anxiety to stress and depression that have pushed many young people’s mental health emergency to the breaking point. Health experts have actually called this a national emergency.

But here’s some good news: Research shows that participation in the arts and other creative experiences improves young people's well-being. In fact, as one researcher from Rutgers University’s Social-Emotional and Character Development Lab recently stated, “Arts educators are a secret weapon in fostering positive mental health for kids.”

Enter COMPAS teaching artists who, thanks to our generous donors, are exactly the type of ‘secret weapon’ he’s talking about. Because of you, they are improving the well-being of children and teens right in their own classrooms. The power of this work is significant and best illustrated with a story about the impact of a COMPAS Teaching Artist and a creative experience on one student and her classmates.

Akira* is a fifth grader. With the stresses of the pandemic and a couple of moves in recent years, she had struggled in school. When her family made another move, Akira joined Regina Skoy’s classroom at Highland Elementary in Columbia Heights.

Ms. Skoy shared that Akira was very quiet, and after a few weeks at her new school, she still hadn’t found a friend group. But things turned around for Akira when COMPAS Teaching Artist Alanna Morris came into her classroom to infuse learning with creativity.

“Miss Alanna” got the kids moving and grooving during a week-long Social Dance residency. Alanna explained that lots of kids connect with Social Dance because it comes from the street instead of an institution. Plus, it gets the kids talking to each other, laughing, and getting creative as they learn dance and vocal patterns, then make up new steps.

Akira was hooked. Ms. Skoy said, “Dancing was something Akira was really good at, and having that creative outlet enabled her to make friends and become a leader in the classroom. During Miss Alanna’s residency, Akira began opening up and sharing more about her life outside of school. It was wonderful to see her blossom!”

Alanna explained, “We did a lot together, not just movement. There was a fair amount of singing and rhythm-making and music-making with our bodies. It’s hard not to feel good when...

Believer

Finding your way when you’re down
When you’re broken into pieces
You hurt and you heal
Come on just feel

What you believe, you can achieve
Get out of your way you can do it

I believe there is hope even when I think hope is gone
I believe the divine is real
I believe I’m brave
I believe in myself
I believe in trying something new
I’m a believer

Success is not your enemy
Hold on to your bravery
Be bold and real
Strong as steel

You're singing at the top of your lungs and stomping, clapping, and moving."

Again, research backs this up. It shows that taking part in creative experiences helps kids channel the big emotions that come up during turbulent times. It also helps kids form meaningful bonds with others. This has been especially challenging during the pandemic for all kids, not just Akira. There are many students like Akira... students who attend schools where almost 75% of kids qualify for free or reduced-price lunch... students whose well-being is suffering... students who NEED creative outlets more than ever.

You are what it takes for students to have the same experience as Akira. Your support has ensured that more students have had creative experiences that help them channel those big emotions, connect with others, and discover their talents.

Fifth graders might not always find the right words to express themselves. But their actions tell us when support makes a difference in their lives. As Ms. Skoy told us, “On the last day (after requesting permission), one of the students ran to the front of the room and gave Miss Alanna a hug. Other students joined in until there was a ‘hug pile’ around Miss Alanna.”

Thank you, donors! We hope you feel that ‘hug pile’ around you, too. Your financial support is vital, and it is so appreciated! You are changing lives!

“One participant who self-proclaimed himself as “not” an artist ended up realizing that he had a wonderfully unique perspective on the world around him.”
– Classroom teacher

“One student is a quiet boy who had a hard time adjusting to being back in school after distance learning. He had been almost lethargic. I did not anticipate that he would be interested in creative movement, but he loved it. He laughed and seemed to come out of his shell, especially when we did the dragonfly life cycle dance. He was so energetic and had so much fun. I really feel like he got a chance to explore a new aspect of his personality and his interests.”

Government

This activity is made possible by the voters of Minnesota through a grant from the Minnesota State Arts Board, thanks to a legislative appropriation from the arts and cultural heritage fund.

A special thank you to the Saint Paul Jaycee’s Foundation for selecting COMPAS to continue the tradition of their Les Farrington Best 100 exhibit. We are honored to create opportunities for talented East Metro middle and high school students to showcase their visual art in the renamed Emerging Young Artists juried exhibit and to win awards.
