The City of Aspen recently released a helpful resource for mountain towns: The Greenhouse Gas Reduction Toolkit – How to Take Action in Your Community. It's a comprehensive guide to help communities develop climate action plans that fit their unique conditions.

This Toolkit came about when the City of Aspen undertook their climate action planning process in 2016–17 and the team realized that the list of actions they were building could be relevant to other communities. In an effort to increase the accessibility and impact of this impressive body of work, they decided to compile the Toolkit in the hopes it will help others as an immediate-, mid- and long-term planning resource. It's especially relevant to mountain towns with high tourism. Check it out!
