Other Disclosures of Outcomes:

Oral Comprehensive Examination:

100% of students have successfully passed the Oral Comprehensive Examinations

Data includes all Oral Comprehensive Examinations from 2014-2016.*

Doctoral students complete two oral comprehensive examinations. Doctor of Arts students, upon completion of the first concentration of twenty-four credit hours, schedule their first oral comprehensive examination. Upon completion of the second concentration of twenty-four credit hours, students schedule the second oral comprehensive examination. Doctor of Education students, upon completion of the first nineteen credit hours of prescribed courses, schedule their first oral comprehensive examination. Upon completion of the remaining twenty-five credit hours, students schedule the second oral comprehensive examination.

Requiring students to complete two separate oral comprehensive examinations spaced throughout their program ensures a higher success and completion rate. This allows students to set short-term benchmark goals which are attainable within a rigorous doctoral program.

Capstone Course:

100% of students have received a passing grade on the Capstone Course

Data includes all students who enrolled in HUM 502: Capstone Course, HUM 702: Capstone Course, or EDU 722: Capstone Course between 2014-2016. This data does not include students currently enrolled in the Capstone Courses.*

The Capstone Course is the culminating experience at the university. It allows the graduate student to demonstrate her or his personal knowledge of the authors, ideas, topics, and subtopics studied in the program. The student begins this course by designing and submitting a proposal for his or her capstone project. A student may choose to write a thesis, design a practicum, or plan a project. A thesis is a written account of a sustained inquiry into an idea, theme, or issue of interest to the student. A practicum entails a supervised practical application of the knowledge acquired in the program of study. A project requires applying skills acquired as a result of the student's studies and might include writing a novel, creating a series of works of art, or writing a substantial essay based on fieldwork relating to the student's program of study. The selected capstone project must align with all federal regulations and the student's home-state rules regarding state authorization. Upon completion of the thesis, practicum, or project, the graduate student makes a presentation with oral and written components to members of his or her Instructional Team.
