Worried about losing access to health insurance during pandemic.

89% of workers reported fearing that they were going to lose access to health insurance during the pandemic for themselves and their families.

“My major concern on coming back to work too soon is for the safety and wellbeing of my family’s health as well as my own as both my sons currently have autoimmune diseases and myself having lupus and my husband high blood pressure which leaves us all high risk.”

“I want to feel safe from this virus and cared about.”

75% don’t want to be forced back to work too early, before the pandemic has passed. They want to know that their employer won’t be able to threaten their jobs as they defend their health.

“This all happening to soon. I’m scared.”

“My mother lives with me and is a high-risk senior. I need to feel that is safe enough to go to work and not bring the virus back home to her.”

“I have children and I don’t feel safe to come back to work sooner than we have a treatment for this virus because it can be dangerous for me and for my family.”
83% voiced concern that the bosses are going to try to cut corners as the industry reopens, and they want guarantees that the hotels will be properly staffed to keep the hotels clean.

“Please help us at our restaurant. Our new pandemic standards are not being honored and we all feel extremely worried about opening.”

“We went back to work the past 2 days and they are not up to the new code and still expect us to be at work. We are not getting our temperatures taken, we have no mask or shields, there still is not a plexiglass for the bar. The restaurant was not sanitized or clean for the matter.”

“Is opening anytime soon really worth potentially losing lives? A lot of our staff are older and are much more likely to spread COVID. Please don’t reopen anytime soon, let’s take our time with this.”

81% told us that they need more time to properly clean and protect themselves.

Room attendants report egregious working conditions as they are entering rooms once again.

“It is too soon for us to return to work. We will be unable to uphold these standards as guests do not follow simple rules of the resort. I feel unsafe and uncomfortable.”
