Research Plan – Sales Counselors

KB Home Sales Counselor Exploratory Interview

Background

This interview will focus on defining the current sales counselor experience in the KB Home sales process, as well as defining areas of opportunity for the myKB application. The researchers (Sasha, Jackie, and Matt) will be conducting interviews both in-person and remotely (through video/phone call) using the guided storytelling method and critical incident technique.

Research Objectives

- Gain understanding of sales counselors mental models, verify, and challenge our assumptions on the sales process
- Fill in gaps in current knowledge base of the KB Home Sales experiences
- Surface pain points and gaps in the current sales experience and target areas of opportunity for the application
- Identify and document the diversity of sales processes throughout regions

Methodology

Guided Storytelling/Day in the Life

To build rapport with sales counselors, the researchers will have them walk through a typical “day in the life” to establish familiarity with their routines and understand how the application would potentially fit into their behavior and practices. We are aiming to learn the sales counselors’ vocabulary around specific processes/activities in the home-sales experience, so that the application can communicate effectively and in their language.

Critical Incident Technique

Ask individuals to describe a sales experience that either ended well or poorly. Coupled with the directed storytelling approach, our goal is to generate scenarios that cover both the positive and negative critical incidents. From here we can generate possible explanations for recommendations for improving the outcome through the MyKB application. By focusing on extreme situations, this technique also helps individuals better recall and isolate specific moments in the sales experience.

- Outlining of what we'd like to know, establishing "user as expert"
- Emphasis upon no "wrong" or "right" answers, and all feedback being helpful
- Openness to questions from the user around the wireframes or about the interview process at a ny time
- Ask for permission to be recorded for internal use only
- Prompt for any questions before beginning

Talk aloud questions

- How long have you been a KB Sales Counselor?
- Have you worked for KB in any other regional division, role, or capacity?
- How many homes have you sold over your career?
- How many leads do you typically have at one time?
- Of those leads, how many turn into sales (sign purchase and options agreement)?
- Could you estimate how many customers cancel?
- Are there particular phases of the process that see higher cancellation rates? (post-Studio? Post-Construction?)
- What are some of the common reasons cited for cancellation?
- In your own words, can you describe the major milestones you outline for potential customers in the home-buying process? What are your self-defined milestones?
- Can you walk me through your KB Home sales process?

REGISTRATION/ENGAGEMENT (Send personal email, reviews customer preferences, floor plan sent to sales rep, sends personal templated email, accepts appt. time.)

- Describe your process for finding and identifying a lead.
- Can you tell me about the first interaction you have had with a lead? (how does outreach happen? what are common discussion/conversation topic)
- Do your colleagues follow the same process for outreach? If so, describe other processes you have encountered.
- How many times do you typically reach out to a lead?
- How do you track and manage communication with leads?
- What tools (both digital and analog) databases, materials (informational, promotional, etc.) do you use? How do you use them?
- Can you tell me about a time you were frustrated by this process? Does this happen often? (If applicable) What would have been a better solution/outcome in this scenario?
- Do your leads use the interactive floor planning tools?
- Can you describe the "ideal" interaction and process during this onboarding stage?
- Can you imagine any features that would help you reach more customers?

SALE

- Can you walk me through a typical first visit to the sales office?
- On average, how many times does a lead visit the sales office before signing a purchase
