The Buttes-Chaumont (bald mount) is a public park in the 19th arrondissement, where Andrée proposes to take Albertine because she had never been there before. Andrée later claims to have made frequently made love there to Albertine in one of the park’s many secluded areas.

This park is the third largest in Paris and features cliffs, bridges, a lake, a grotto enclosing a 20-meter waterfall, and English and Chinese gardens where one finds many indigenous and exotic trees.