

Purpose & Practice

We see the music as a vital part of the liturgy, which is in essence, a dialogue between God and us, a pattern that we can follow throughout the week. We see God's glory, we are called to worship, we respond with devotion, as we see God, we also see our sin, and there is space to confess, as well as receive God's unequivocal pardon, and we respond in thanksgiving.

The music functions in this dialogue by giving people the chance, and in fact the responsibility, to sing the truth to their neighbor, as well as receive that truth and worship. The music team simply facilitates the church serving one another in this way by giving them a unified voice.

In that vein, in our stylistic and song choices, we value songs that are singable, both ancient and modern, and songs that cover a range of emotion, giving space for both joy and lament, praise and pleading, and a strong current of the gospel running throughout. As we worship along with the people, we seek to serve them by playing with joy, artistry, humility and confidence.
