†United Scenic Artists, Local USA 829
THORNTON WILDER (1897-1975) is not as well known today as other American authors of the first half of the 20th century (for example, Eugene O’Neill, Tennessee Williams, and Arthur Miller in drama; F. Scott Fitzgerald, Ernest Hemingway, and William Faulkner in the novel). Yet he wrote two Pulitzer Prize-winning plays (Our Town [1938] and The Skin of Our Teeth [1942]), another play that was a commercial success (The Matchmaker [1955]) and an enormous hit when adapted as a musical (Hello, Dolly! [1964]), and many one-act plays.

Also, Wilder published seven novels, beginning in the 1920s and ending in the 1970s. His second novel, The Bridge of San Luis Rey (1927), was an international bestseller that has never been out of print, and it won him his first Pulitzer Prize (Wilder is still the only author to win the coveted award for both drama and fiction). Furthermore, Alfred Hitchcock hired him to write the screenplay for Shadow of a Doubt (1943), one of the renowned filmmaker’s early American movies. Wilder also collaborated with composers on opera adaptations of two of his plays; wrote essays on theater and American culture; and published scholarly articles on James Joyce and Lope de Vega. Last but not least, Wilder was a teacher: at the Lawrenceville School in New Jersey during the 1920s, at the University of Chicago during the 1930s, and at Harvard as a visiting professor during the 1950/51 academic year.

In short, Thornton Wilder was a literary jack of all trades.
WILDER’s versatility was perhaps the professional manifestation of his childhood and education. Born in Madison, Wisconsin, where his father, Amos Parker Wilder, was the editor of the Wisconsin State Journal, the whole Wilder family (two sons and three daughters) moved to China when Amos was named consul general in Hong Kong during the Theodore Roosevelt administration. However, neither Amos’s wife, Isabella (Niven) Wilder, nor his children were happy in China, so they moved to Berkeley, California, where Thornton would graduate from high school—but not before getting involved in theater and learning to love world literature under the influence of his mother. Thornton thrived both at Oberlin College in Ohio for the first two years of his undergraduate education, and at Yale in Connecticut from which he graduated after an interruption to serve in the Coast Guard during World War I. After Yale, Wilder studied for a year at the American Academy in Rome. Taking a sabbatical from the Lawrenceville School, he earned a master’s degree in French literature from Princeton. With the publication of The Bridge of San Luis Rey, Wilder could afford to quit teaching and began his life-long travels primarily to the centers of culture in Europe. In his first 30 years, Wilder didn’t stay in one place for very long, which is perhaps why he didn’t stay in one genre for very long as a writer, alternating between plays and novels and other endeavors.
WILDER began writing The Skin of Our Teeth after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor launched the U.S. into World War II. That is why he said, “I think it mostly comes alive under conditions of crisis.” 2400 military personnel and civilians died on June 7, 1941, a date that shall live in infamy, as President Franklin Roosevelt said to the nation. In this century, there have been two attacks on the U.S. on dates that shall live in infamy: September 11, 2001, and January 6, 2021. The past 20 years have been a time of crisis for the U.S. and indeed the whole world: the U.S. invasions of Afghanistan and Iraq and other actions taken as part of the ‘war on terror’; the refugee crisis in the Middle East after the rise of ISIS; ‘strong man’ leaders of nations undermining democratic government; and currently the global Coronavirus pandemic. Wilder’s references to environmental threats makes The Skin of Our Teeth particularly relevant today as we face hurricanes, droughts, fires, and other problems caused by climate change.
IN ACT 1, the human race, as represented by the Antrobus family, faces extinction during the Ice Age. The family must also decide how to deal with the refugees heading south in flight from an advancing glacier; will they take them in and share their food and fire?

IN ACT 2, having survived “volcanoes, [crop-eating] grasshoppers, earthquakes, and plagues,” the Antrobuses take a vacation to the Atlantic City boardwalk, but the human family (‘Antrobus’ is derived from anthropos, Greek for ‘Man’) is in danger first from the temptation of hedonism (in a seduction scene with Mr. Antrobus and the family maid Sabina from Act 1, here Miss Lily-Sabina Fairweather, winner of a beauty contest); and then from a storm and ensuing flood that prompts the Antrobuses to gather animals two of a kind into a boat to start again after the water subsides (an obvious adaptation of the story of Noah’s ark in the Bible).

IN ACT 3, after a world war during which Mr. Antrobus and his son Henry were on opposite sides, both return to their suburban New Jersey home where Mrs. Antrobus and daughter Gladys (with a newborn baby) have been hiding in the basement. Mr. Antrobus has lost his will to begin again, but he regains it and Sabina ends the play as she began it, dusting the living room, and then addresses the audience: “We have to go on for ages and ages yet.... The end of this play isn’t written yet. Mr. and Mrs. Antrobus! Their heads are full of plans and they’re as confident as the first day they began....” This conclusion, and Mr. Antrobus’s Act 3 speech about the ideas in books serving as stepping stones of civilization, gives the play an optimistic outlook that, despite a cyclical view of history as one crisis after another, we will survive, if only by “the skin of our teeth.”
