

A Declaration of Our Inter-Religious Commitment:

A draft policy statement of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America

Evangelical Lutheran Church in America
God's work. Our hands.

Jan. 8, 2018

Dear Church,

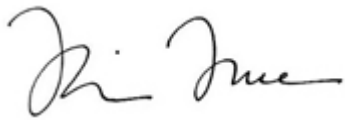

Two years ago Presiding Bishop Elizabeth Eaton invited 11 of us to serve on a task force to draft a policy statement on inter-religious relations. It has been a privilege to work together to craft the document that now comes to you for your review and comment.

Each member of the task force brought both expertise in an aspect of inter-religious engagement and personal experience in working with and learning from those in other religious traditions. Our own meetings have been enriched by lively and thoughtful discussion of the themes and commitments incorporated in this document.

We hope that you will experience similar joy and fresh learning as you read these pages and discuss these ideas with others in your congregation, classroom or circle of friends. We are eager to receive your feedback and are grateful to be part of a church that invites wisdom from people of all ages and backgrounds.

On behalf of the task force, I thank you for taking time to read and reflect on what is presented here. May this discernment process also help you articulate your deepest convictions as a person of faith.

Yours in Christ,

Reader's introduction and tips for individual and group study

The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA) Inter-Religious Task Force, appointed by Presiding Bishop Elizabeth A. Eaton in 2016, is preparing an inter-religious policy statement to be considered by the 2019 ELCA Churchwide Assembly. This draft of "A Declaration of Our Inter-Religious Commitment" is an invitation to everyone in the ELCA to join in conversation and discernment about our inter-religious calling and commitments.

There are several ways to participate in the process:

1. Study, discuss, comment: You are invited to study, discuss and use the online response form to share your thoughts in response to the draft. This can be done by individuals or as part of a study group. The response form is available online. Click here to take the survey.
2. Participate in a hearing: Some synods and ELCA institutions will be holding hearings, and you might attend one in your area. If you are interested, please speak to your synod office, LEIRN representative or send an email to eirinfo@elca.org.

The comment period will close on June 30, 2018.

This draft represents the best thinking of the task force to date. This draft comes with the unanimous support of the task force for sharing with our church for discussion. It follows and grows out of the long-time inter-religious relations of the ELCA and its predecessor bodies, as well as the contemporary case studies of inter-religious relations lifted up in the 2016 publication Engaging Others, Knowing Ourselves: A Lutheran Calling in a Multi-Religious World (Lutheran University Press).

Your response to this draft, along with that of many others across this church, is vital to the process of developing a proposed policy statement that will be considered by the 2019 Churchwide Assembly. Talking together is important in our life together as part of Christ's body. Your feedback will inform the task force's thinking as it revises this draft to create a proposed policy statement to be considered first by the ELCA Church Council and then by the 2019 Churchwide Assembly.

In preparing to lead discussion sessions, questions like these may help guide the discussion:

- What in each section speaks to your experience? In what ways?
- What do you think are the strengths of each section? Weaknesses?
- What else needs to be said? How should it be said differently?
- What advice do you have for the task force, keeping in mind that it is charged with writing a policy statement for the whole ELCA?

Tips for leading the sessions:

- Keep in mind that discussing matters related to inter-religious relations require a degree of sensitivity.
- Invite people of all genders, ages and perspectives to join the discussion. Sometimes people just need to be invited to feel welcome.
- Leaders do not need to be pastors. Discussion facilitators from within the congregation or group can be recruited and briefed.
- Read and become familiar with the content of the entire draft before beginning a study session.
- Be prepared to take some notes or assign a recorder to capture ideas and thoughts during the discussion. This may be especially helpful when you get to the online response form.

Thank you for your prayerful participation.

6 PART 1

7 INTRODUCTION

8
9 “This church confesses Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior and the Gospel as the power 10 of God for the salvation of all who believe.” “Jesus Christ is the Word of God incarnate, 11 through whom everything was made and through whose life, death, and resurrection 12 God fashions a new creation” (ELCA Constitution, Chapter 2).

13
14 The grace of God is an undeserved gift that re-orientes our relationship with God. With 15 this gift comes an invitation to love and serve the neighbor. God entrusts to us as 16 “in clay jars” (2 Corinthians 4:7) the “message of reconciliation” for all (2 Corinthians 17 5:19). “Christ, our peace, has put an end to the hostility of race, ethnicity, gender, and 18 economic class” (“Freed in Christ: Race, Ethnicity, and Culture,” ELCA social statement, 19 1993, p. 1). As ambassadors for Christ in a deeply divided world, we seek right, peaceful 20 and just relationships with our neighbors of all religions and those who practice no 21 religion. We do this as an expression of our faith.

22
23 Since 1988, we have deepened and expanded our inter-religious relations as church, 24 building upon the work of our predecessor bodies, The Lutheran World Federation and 25 our ecumenical partners. Our 1991 policy statement, “Ecumenism: The Vision of the 26 Evangelical Lutheran Church in America,” called for “a separate, official statement” that 27 would reflect the “distinct responsibility for the church to enter into conversations and 28 reach greater understanding with people of other faiths.” This declaration seeks to fulfill 29 that recommendation.

30 31 OUR CONTEXT

32
33 Encounter with religious diversity

34 35 Each layer of history, starting with the native peoples of this land, has shaped the 36 religious diversity of American society. In recent decades, patterns of global migration, 37 immigration and forced displacement, coupled with new patterns of religious affiliation, 38 have resulted in rapid and radical changes to the religious diversity in our midst. Today, 39 many Lutheran Christians in the United States encounter neighbors of other religions 40 and worldviews in their communities, schools, work places, civic spaces, circles of 41 friends and families.

42
43 As used in this document, the word “religion” refers to all beliefs, such as Buddhism, 44 Hinduism, Islam, Judaism and Sikhism. Whenever “neighbor” is used, it includes all 45 of those who profess a religion, plus those who do not, including those who consider 46 themselves atheists or agnostics or ascribe to other worldviews that are not explicitly 47 religious. This document seeks to address a Lutheran approach to understanding and 48 engaging with our neighbors in a multi-religious, pluralistic context.

49
50 Possible responses to our context

51 52 As a church, we must consider anew our calling and commitments in a multi-53 religious world. Many Lutherans and many Lutheran ministries already participate 54 in inter-religious activities such as theological dialogue, advocacy and service, 55 which build mutual understanding and advance the common good. Lutheran 56 Christians are called to move from co-existence to a more robust engagement.
57 Namely, we’re called to move beyond fear, stereotypes, apathy and mere tolerance 58 to friendship, mutual understanding and cooperation, confronting whenever 59 possible the often-compounding oppressions experienced by people of all religions 60 and worldviews on the basis of race, ethnicity, gender and class.

61
62 Fear and division

63
64 There are many ways individuals and communities can respond to religious 65 difference. The most harmful responses are grounded in ignorance and fear, which 66 can breed stereotypes that in the extreme are used to fuel incidents of religious 67 bigotry, restrict religious freedoms, and arouse conflicts that are destructive of 68 life, property and the environment. We live in a context of ongoing anti-Semitism 69 and anti-Muslim bigotry, as well as incidents, harassment and violence directed 70 against other minority religious and ethnic communities, houses of worship and 71 indigenous peoples. The ELCA must play an active role in dispelling fear of our 72 neighbors, in opposing religious bigotry and in standing with those who are the 73 targets of fear, discrimination, hatred and violence.

74 Inaction

75

76 Another possible response to religious diversity is inaction. For some of us, 77 an encounter with religious difference may seem a distant reality or one we 78 are not quite ready to acknowledge. Some of us have limited information and 79 experiences, which can sometimes mean that we are less motivated to reach out 80 to our neighbors. All of us have been exposed to stereotypes, which may seem 81 harmless when not acted upon or spoken aloud. Yet, in the face of bigotry, apathy 82 and passivity are not neutral. They too can be destructive. In the Small Catechism, 83 Martin Luther explains that there are responsibilities associated with “not bear[ing] 84 false witness against your neighbor.” He explains that “we are to fear and love God, 85 so that we do not tell lies about our neighbors, betray or slander them, or destroy 86 their reputations. Instead, we are to come to their defense, speak well of them, and 87 interpret everything they do in the best possible light” (Small Catechism, Eighth 88 Commandment). Action is, in fact, required of us.

89

90 Encounter and engagement

91

92 When the alternative is so devastating, respectful conversation, mutual 93 understanding, advocacy, accompaniment, friendship, mutual hospitality and 94 multiple forms of cooperation are imperative. Lutherans are called to move beyond 95 tolerance of our religiously diverse neighbors to engagement with them. This 96 calling leads to concrete commitments that we strive to live out as people of faith.
97 We are freed in Christ to engage our neighbors in a multi-religious world.

98

99 OUR VISION

100

101 As the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA), our vision is what inspires our 102 calling. It is a vision of a world in which individuals of diverse cultures and races, with 103 varied understandings of the divine, live in harmony. Ours is a vision of a world where 104 hope abounds and fear no longer separates one person from another or one people 105 from another, where “justice roll[s] down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-106 flowing stream” (Amos 5:24) and “the leaves of the tree [of life] are for the healing of the 107 nations” (Revelation 22:2b). We envision a world of God’s shalom, in which the generosity 108 and mercy of God are celebrated, and all of God’s creatures and all of God’s creation are 109 treated with care.

110

111 The Scriptures yearn for such a world of shalom, but they also recognize that we live 112 “between the times”—between the inauguration of God’s kingdom and its fulfillment. In 113 the meantime, we struggle with all the forces that work against the kingdom. But we, 114 the baptized, experience the gift of Christ in us and the gift of the Holy Spirit calling 115 us to turn away from those forces and to celebrate every sign of God’s kingdom. As a 116 community of faith, we are inspired to put our vision into practice here and now, even 117 if we can see only the vague outlines of its fulfillment. We realize that we will fall short 118 of the glory of God. Nevertheless, we live in love and hope. We foster healthy relations 119 and healthy communities in which all can flourish. We break the cycle of escalating 120 retaliation that divides and destroys. With God’s help, we seek to mend and heal the 121 world that God so dearly and so deeply loves.

122

123 Guided by this vision and sobered by this realization, we seek, as one part of our 124 undertaking, to achieve mutual understanding among all people of different religions 125 and worldviews and to inspire all to work together for the common good. We do so to 126 give an accounting for the hope that is within us (I Peter 3:15b).

127

128 Mutual understanding

129

130 Lutheran Christians who engage their religiously diverse neighbors can expect 131 both a new understanding of the other and a deeper understanding and 132 appreciation of their own Christian faith. “Understanding” as used here is a 133 process of moving from factual understanding of commonalities and differences 134 to grasping coherence and even glimpsing beauty, sensing how it is that others 135 love and cherish their religious traditions, while empathizing with others in 136 the challenges and struggles they may face in their religious commitments.
137 Mutual understanding opens us up to the possibility of friendship—of accepting 138 responsibility for each other’s well-being.

139

140 Luther was clear in his insistence that our understanding of faith can and does grow 141 and change: as we experience new things in life, as we study and learn, and as we 142 meditate and pray. Hence, it is possible for one’s understanding to change without 143 one’s faith being undermined. Participating in inter-religious relations does not 144 diminish but deepens our faith. By engaging our neighbors, we learn to articulate 145 our faith more clearly. We learn to express what being a follower of Jesus really 146 means to us in today’s world. In encounter, we can also expect to learn something 147 about the glory of the Lord, relying on the Spirit who, like at Pentecost, amazes and 148 delights us by giving us the capacity to comprehend each other in our “speaking 149 about God’s deeds of power” (Acts 2).

150 Common good

151

152 In this vision, religious diversity, when accompanied by understanding and 153 cooperation, enriches the whole. Through inter-religious relationship, we receive 154 the gifts of our neighbors and experience more fully the exquisiteness that all 155 are made in the image of God. Mutual understanding and a commitment to the 156 common good are reciprocal. Mutual understanding and a deep appreciation of 157 the similarities and differences among religions and worldviews enhance working 158 together for the common good. At the same time, working together for the 159 common good can enhance mutual understanding and the self-understanding of 160 each participant. Seeking mutual understanding and the common good are active 161 ways in which we take steps toward our vision of God’s shalom.

162

163 OUR CALLING

164

165 As the ELCA, we claim inter-religious engagement as part of our vocation. We—the 166 individual members and participants, congregations and the whole church—are called by 167 God and freed in Christ to love and serve our neighbors in a multi-religious world. This 168 calling begins with our neighbors next door and extends “to the ends of the earth” (Acts 169 1:8). This includes loving and serving those who share our faith in Jesus Christ, as well 170 as those who do not. It is our duty and joy to extend God’s shalom—God’s love, mercy 171 and grace to all those who are made in the image of God and the whole of creation. In 172 other words, we are called to inter-religious engagement because we are Lutheran.¹ We 173 live out this calling in four ways.

174

175 Love our neighbor

176

177 Every person’s calling to love and serve God and our neighbor is central to the 178 Lutheran tradition. As Luther reminded us, God asks that we direct our gratitude 179 for God’s generosity outward to others rather than upward in activities intended 180 to please God. No one is excluded from “our neighbor.” Jesus makes this point in 181 the parable of the good Samaritan (Luke 10:25-37), in which he chooses a person 182 of another religion to illustrate what it means to be a neighbor. Our vocation, our 183 calling to be a neighbor, does not exclude from “neighbor” those whose religion is 184 different from our own. God’s mercy is to be extended to all.

1 Biblical and theological basis for these commitments is discussed in detail in Part 2 of this document.

185 Serve our neighbor

186

187 Our vocation includes service to the individual neighbor and to the community 188 as a whole. The two are connected because how well the community functions 189 affects every individual in it and vice versa. To know how to serve the community, 190 we need to understand what benefits all parts of that community, and this means 191 reaching out to neighbors across religion, race, ethnicity, gender and class. Our 192 vocation also includes serving alongside our neighbor, as we respond together to 193 meet the needs of others. While we may not necessarily share the same religious 194 inspiration for doing so, our common vision for peace and justice leads us to 195 engage in service for the sake of the world.

196

197 Live in solidarity with our neighbor

198

199 Being a neighbor can be risky. When power is abused and fears grip a community or 200 a nation, standing up for those who are being targeted or excluded takes courage. We 201 are called to exhibit this courage and take this risk. In the face of social pressures that 202 make us feel paralyzed, our calling includes developing a sense of agency—that is, a 203 sense that each of us can make a difference. Our attention needs to be focused on our 204 God-given gifts and responsibilities rather than the many impediments to acting on 205 behalf of those who are being maligned or harassed or harmed, recognizing that some 206 of our neighbors are experiencing multiple forms of oppression at once. For all of this, 207 a support community of fellow believers and inter-religious partners is very important.

208

209 In the United States, many Christians live in neighborhoods that are predominantly 210 Christian, where social expectations (holidays, school vacations, work rules, 211 etc.) have accommodated their beliefs and practices, affording them significant 212 privilege. The same is often not true for our neighbors who practice other 213 religions or those who practice no religion at all. They can be made to feel like 214 outsiders. As a result, we are called to be sensitive toward our neighbors of other 215 religions and worldviews, relinquishing our privilege and engaging them in the 216 spirit of accompaniment. This includes listening, learning and letting go of the 217 need to always issue the invitation or be in control of the process. It also means 218 recognizing that other religions are organized differently, sometimes with very little 219 or no corresponding structures to our own. Assumptions about cultural norms, 220 both within the ELCA and about our neighbors, need to be constantly analyzed 221 and avoided. Setting the course for building and deepening partnerships and 222 determining the right pace together are ways in which we can begin to practice 223 mutual hospitality—the deepest form of living in solidarity with our neighbor.

226 We are committed to engaging our neighbors without compromising who we are or 227 the fullness of the calling we have received. An integral part of this calling is to be 228 witnesses to Christ: to bear with our lives the good news of the gospel and to share 229 the joy of the good news with our neighbor in ways that honor our conviction that 230 every human is made in the image of God (Genesis 1:27) and that all of creation 231 is good (Genesis 1:31). This means that we will faithfully share with our neighbors 232 our belief that Jesus Christ is “the way, and the truth, and the life” (John 14:6); we 233 will serve as ambassadors of the ministry of reconciliation we have received from 234 God through Christ (2 Corinthians 5:18); and we will uphold Scripture, the Creeds 235 and the Confessions as core to our Lutheran identity and vocation. As we engage 236 our neighbors in the fullness of who we are and what we believe, we expect that 237 so, too, will our partners engage us with their deepest convictions.

239 We enter into this calling in a spirit of humility and self-criticism, repentant of our past 240 mistakes, anticipating future mistakes and committed to the justice, peace, and well-241 being of our neighbors. In doing so, we seek to build upon our church’s longstanding 242 work in inter-religious relations, with ecumenical partners and through The Lutheran 243 World Federation. We accept that we will have unanswered questions about how God is 244 working in and through our neighbors of other religions and even in and through us.
245 Yet, we anticipate that in loving, serving, standing in solidarity with, and witnessing to 246 our neighbors, we will encounter God, participate in building a more just and peaceful 247 world and find our faith enriched.

249 OUR COMMITMENTS

251 Today, we participate in God’s mission in an increasingly multi-religious world. In our 252 neighborhoods and globally, there are examples of peaceful religious co-existence but 253 also active religious intolerance, inter-religious conflict, violence, discrimination, and 254 religious bigotry and persecution. In the midst of this, God has given us the ministry of 255 reconciliation (2 Corinthians 5:18). Therefore, in faithful response to God’s love in Christ 256 Jesus, we are called and committed to actively:

- 257 • seek mutual understanding with our neighbors of other religions and 258 worldviews; and
- 259 • cooperate with our neighbors of other religions and worldviews as instruments of 260 God’s justice and peace.

261 Across the ELCA, the form of our inter-religious relations will vary depending on 262 context. As a church, we hold these commitments in common as a policy to guide our 263 work and as a measure of accountability to our inter-religious partners.

- 264 1. The ELCA will pray for the well-being of our neighbors of other religions and those 265 who practice no religion, and we will pray for God’s continued guidance as we live 266 out our Lutheran calling in a multi-religious world.
- 267 2. The ELCA will hold fast to the gospel, and to Scripture, the Creeds, and 268 Confessions at the core of our Lutheran identity and faith and will work to 269 foster relationships of mutual respect with regard to our inter-religious partners’ 270 identity and commitments (“Christian Witness in a Multi-Religious World:
271 Recommendations for Conduct,” the World Council of Churches, Pontifical Council 272 for Interreligious Dialogue & World Evangelical Alliance, 2011).
- 273 3. The ELCA will witness to the power of life in Christ in and through our daily lives, 274 in our inter-religious relations, and in preaching that gives testimony to the power 275 of God at work in the world. We will engage our neighbors of other religions and 276 worldviews with respect for their traditions and will not approach inter-religious 277 relations as a means for manipulative or deceptive attempts at conversion.
- 278 4. The ELCA will seek to know its neighbors, to overcome stereotypes, and “to come 279 to their defense, speak well of them, and interpret everything they do in the best 280 possible light” (Small Catechism, Eighth Commandment).
- 281 5. The ELCA will explore and encourage inter-religious friendship, accompaniment 282 and cooperation with all who seek justice, peace, human wholeness and the well-283 being of creation, recognizing that dialogue and cooperation are the activities of 284 people not religions.
- 285 6. The ELCA will defend the full participation of all in our religiously diverse society, 286 “strengthening public space as a just place for all” (“The Church in the Public 287 Space: A Statement of The Lutheran World Federation,” 2016).
- 288 7. The ELCA will defend human rights and oppose all forms of religious bigotry, fear-289 mongering, violence, discrimination and persecution and stand in solidarity with 290 those who experience them, whether they are Christian or of another religious 291 tradition or worldview, upholding commitments made in existing ELCA social 292 teaching.
- 293 8. The ELCA will seek to be aware of when we have made mistakes or missteps, 294 acknowledge them, and seek repentance, reconciliation and right relationship with 295 our inter-religious neighbors.
- 296 9. The ELCA, in consultation with our partners, will seek to understand the religions 297 of the world so as to identify and oppose those distortions that misuse religion to justify oppression, violence, genocide or terrorism.

- 298 10.The ELCA will, whenever possible, work with other Christians and through 299 ecumenical and inter-religious coalitions in its quest for inter-religious 300 understanding and cooperation.
- 301 11.The ELCA will seek counsel from other religious groups in its discernment of and 302 advocacy for the common good.
- 303 12.The ELCA will identify and produce study and dialogue materials and pastoral 304 guidelines for understanding and engaging with other religions, exploring the 305 implications of this understanding for our interpretation of Lutheran Christianity, 306 and reaching out in right relationship to our neighbors of other religions and 307 worldviews.

308

309 PART 2

310

311 Part 1 offers a concise statement regarding our context, our vision, our calling and 312 our commitments with regard to our neighbors. Beyond this concise statement, other 313 questions need to be considered: How do we relate to these neighbors? What do 314 the Scriptures say about those of another religion? What are some of the Lutheran 315 convictions that influence our calling? And what about our commitment to evangelism?
316 Part 2 will seek to begin to address these questions.

317

318 HOW DO WE RELATE TO NEIGHBORS OF ANOTHER RELIGION?

319

320 Various approaches and examples

321

322 No single path exists for inter-religious understanding and cooperation. It takes a variety 323 of forms and moves in differing directions. That is, dialogue can foster study, and study 324 can lead to dialogue. Conversation can lead to cooperation, and cooperation can foster 325 dialogue. Group experiences can produce one-to-one relationships, and one-to-one 326 relationships can lead to group encounters. Whatever form inter-religious relations 327 take, the goal should be to achieve ever-deeper mutual understanding and to maximize 328 cooperation for the sake of the world.

329

330 While engaging those in other religious communities certainly can and should be done 331 individually as we meet individuals at work or in our neighborhood or in school, it also 332 can be done together. Many ELCA members and participants are experienced at inter-333 religious cooperation. Their good work opens opportunities for us to replicate or to join 334 rather than needing to invent or to initiate. It is not possible to provide a comprehensive 335 list of these activities, but food banks and other social service projects, when undertaken 336 cooperatively with our neighbors of other religions and worldviews, are examples, as are

337 advocacy endeavors, such as working for the care of creation or the reduction of HIV 338 and AIDS. Some congregations share their buildings with other religious communities 339 and find the relationship mutually enriching. ELCA colleges have faculty and students 340 and courses that reflect religious diversity and initiatives and student groups that seek 341 to foster sensitivity to religious difference and competency for vocational life in a multi-342 religious world. Lutherans have carefully and compassionately tended to the important 343 dimensions of religion and culture when welcoming and receiving refugees as new 344 neighbors. For more examples, see Engaging Others, Knowing Ourselves: A Lutheran 345 Calling in a Multi-Religious World (Lutheran University Press, 2016).

346

347 Unique considerations

348

349 None of what has been said in this declaration suggests that all religions are the same 350 or that they should become so. Each is different. Even if we understand one, we will be 351 surprised by another, and sometimes even our own! As a result, we need to be careful 352 not to identify individual similarities without taking into account the distinctive role 353 each element may play in its own religion. (For example, fasting is a spiritual practice 354 of both Islam and Christianity, but fasting takes a different shape and significance in 355 the two religions.) This is not to deny, however, that shared values, concerns and hopes 356 do exist across traditions. Discovering them is one of the many joys of inter-religious 357 conversation and cooperation.

358

359 Expanding our inter-religious commitments

360

361 The ELCA has already made a commitment to the Jewish people (see “Declaration 362 of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America to the Jewish Community,” 1994).
363 That commitment reads: “We express our urgent desire to live out our faith in Jesus 364 Christ with love and respect for the Jewish people. We recognize in anti-Semitism a 365 contradiction and an affront to the Gospel, a violation of our hope and calling, and 366 we pledge this church to oppose the deadly working of such bigotry, both within our 367 churches and in the society around us. ... We pray for the continued blessing of the 368 Blessed One upon the increasing cooperation and understanding between Lutheran 369 Christians and the Jewish community.” This declaration of our inter-religious 370 commitment reaffirms that 1994 statement, while at the same time extending the 371 scope of our calling to reflect engagement with our broader multi-religious context, 372 including with our Buddhist, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh neighbors, and those 373 who are not religious.

374 Relating to neighbors who are not religious

375

376 This declaration focuses on neighbors who practice other religions. However, a 377 large number of people in the United States are religiously unaffiliated. Some, such 378 as atheists or secular humanists, have rejected religion and a belief in God; others 379 have affirmed individual spirituality over institutional and/or church affiliation.
380 Lutheran Christians are called to build relationships with all of our neighbors.
381 Many are longing to see Christians practicing the generosity and love they profess 382 and are eager to cooperate on projects that improve the larger community. Such 383 cooperation is a way of practicing our calling, as well as a way of giving authentic 384 witness to our faith.

385

386 Pastoral considerations

387

388 There are a number of pastoral considerations beyond the scope of this declaration, 389 for example, the common reality of multi-religious family life. Therefore, the church 390 recognizes the need for the ongoing development of appropriate pastoral aids, including 391 guidelines for inter-religious marriages, guidelines for pastoral counseling, guidelines for 392 religious education, and guidelines for joint prayer services. In general, the ELCA is open 393 to participating in inter-religious prayer services that honor the distinctive commitments 394 and gifts of each tradition. A good deal of understanding and careful planning is needed 395 to design meaningful services that respect the integrity and rich traditions of more than 396 one religion.

397

398 WHAT DO THE SCRIPTURES SAY ABOUT THOSE OF ANOTHER RELIGION?

399

400 God's goal of shalom

401

402 According to many passages in the Bible, the goal of God's activity in the world is 403 shalom. Shalom can best be described as whole, healthy relationships (a) among 404 humans, (b) between humans and the rest of creation, and (c) between humans and 405 God. The Bible uses multiple images to describe shalom, such as the wolf lying down 406 with the lamb, swords beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks, people 407 able to enjoy the fruits of the trees they have planted, turning the other cheek, going 408 the second mile, and a city with its gates wide open for all, with plenty of food, water 409 and medicine, and with God so close that no special building is needed (Isaiah 2:4, 65:21-410 22; Matthew 5:39-41; Revelation 21:22, 25 and 22:1-2). If God's goal is shalom, then our 411 calling is to foster shalom. Every time we initiate, restore, heal and embody mutually 412 respectful relationships—especially with those who practice different religions—we take a

413 step toward God’s desired goal of shalom. The hope for shalom guides and supports our 414 vision and our calling.

415

416 Other religions in the Bible

417

418 There is no uniformity in the Bible regarding people of other religions. In some cases, 419 the leaders of Israel try to draw a sharp line between the Israelites and their neighbors.
420 In other cases, God is portrayed as working through their neighbors who practice 421 another religion. In addition to the good Samaritan example already mentioned, there 422 are numerous examples:

- 423 • Moses receives valuable advice from Jethro, a priest of Midian, not an Israelite, who 424 also happens to be his father-in-law (Exodus 18).
- 425 • Cyrus of Persia, who did not worship the God of Israel, is “anointed” by God to 426 deliver the Israelites from exile (Isaiah 45:1).
- 427 • Jesus encounters a Canaanite woman and is moved by her faith to heal her 428 daughter (Matthew 15:27).
- 429 • Jesus responds to the needs of a Roman centurion, a commander within the 430 occupying forces—not likely a person who practiced Judaism (See Matthew 8:5-13 431 and Luke 7:1-10).
- 432 • In the story of Abimelech, Abraham and Sarah, it is the outsider Abimelech who 433 listens to God and does what is right (Genesis 20).
- 434 • The Canaanite named Rahab hides the two spies Joshua sent to find out about 435 Jericho prior to its conquest (Joshua 2).
- 436 • And the magi from the east, who likely did not practice Judaism, visit the infant 437 Jesus (Matthew 2:1-12).

438

439 These are but a few examples of how God loves, and works with, in and through people 440 of various religions. These passages reveal the perhaps surprising truth that God at 441 times invites Christians to learn from and even emulate people of other religions. In 442 the case of the good Samaritan, for example, Jesus explicitly instructs us to “Go and 443 do likewise.” These scriptural stories invite us to listen and ponder, from a position of 444 humility, for how God might use inter-religious relations to instruct us and challenge our 445 faith to grow.

446

447 Jewish and Muslim relations

448

449 Though our relationship to our neighbors of other religions and worldviews are each 450 important, Christians have had a particularly complex relationship with their closest 451 neighbors in the faith, Jews and Muslims. In significantly different ways, all three 452 traditions claim to worship the God of Abraham. Given this kinship, Lutherans have a 453 particular responsibility to overcome inaccurate stereotypes and misunderstandings of 454 Jews and Muslims and to seek fuller understanding and cooperation.

455

456 In Romans 9-11, Paul wrestles with the role of those Jews who have not accepted Jesus 457 as the Messiah. He has more questions than answers, but he is clear about one thing: “I 458 ask then, has God rejected his people? By no means!” (Romans 11:1) “For the gifts and 459 the calling of God are irrevocable” (Romans 11:29). Here is evidence that at least one 460 group of people who had rejected Jesus were considered people of God. Another passage 461 where this occurs is Genesis 17:20: “As for Ishmael, I have heard you; I will bless him and 462 make him fruitful and exceedingly numerous; he shall be the father of twelve princes, 463 and I will make him a great nation.” The Scripture unequivocally asserts not only that 464 God has made the descendants of Ishmael a great nation, distinct from the nation 465 of Israel but also that God blesses them. Our Muslim neighbors regularly associate 466 themselves with Abraham, Hagar, and Ishmael and re-enact central events in their story 467 during the annual pilgrimage to Mecca.

468

469 WHAT LUTHERAN CONVICTIONS INFLUENCE OUR CALLING?

470

471 Grace without prerequisites

472

473 Our Lutheran tradition has emphasized that God’s grace comes to humans without 474 any prerequisites. When God repairs God’s relationship with us, it is entirely a result of 475 God’s generosity, not something we have earned. As a result, we cannot know the limits 476 of God’s grace and love. Any attempt to define a limit introduces a prerequisite. God’s 477 remarkable generosity frees us to engage in inter-religious outreach and in this way to 478 embody God’s generosity. Our calling is to come to know our neighbors and in doing so 479 to see in them the image of God.

480

481 Limits on our knowing

482

483 The Lutheran tradition offers other reasons for caution about our claims to know.

484

- 485 • Luther said that no human could know another person’s relationship with God. To 486 be sure, what that person says or does gives us clues, but, ultimately, we cannot 487 see into another’s heart.
- 488 • Similarly, Luther insisted that we cannot know the inner workings of God. To be 489 sure, God has generously revealed God’s attitude toward us, God’s overall purpose 490 and God’s character, but the inner workings of God remain hidden. Hence, we must 491 be careful about claiming to know God’s judgments regarding another religion or 492 the individual human beings who practice it.

- 493 • There is another reason for caution. The Lutheran tradition has understood the 494 word “faith” to mean trust. Faith is relational and not simply, or even primarily, 495 about affirming beliefs. Hence, we also must be careful not to judge our neighbors 496 on the basis of their religious beliefs.

497

498 The full story of the relationship between our neighbor and God is beyond our 499 knowledge. In the context of inter-religious relations, what is important is that we do not 500 need to have this question answered in order to be hospitable, treat one another with 501 respect, and find ways to cooperate for the sake of the larger community.

502

503 God in the world

504

505 As we respond to our calling, we are confident that God is at work in the world, behind 506 the scenes, caring for all of creation, respecting human freedom and dignity, and 507 fostering wholeness. We are sent out into the world by God who is already at work 508 there. When we reach out to a neighbor, we are reaching out to someone who, whether 509 the person acknowledges it or not, has already received gifts from God. In addition, just 510 as the love of God reaches us through the words and actions of others, so do our own 511 words and actions serve as “channels” (Luther’s word) of God’s gifts to others.

512

513 Ministries of reconciliation

514

515 Our calling in Christ is to participate in ministries of reconciliation. “In Christ God was 516 reconciling the world to himself” and “entrusting the message of reconciliation to us” 517 (2 Corinthians 5:18-19). This message, whether spoken or embodied, aims to restore 518 relations. It includes both humans and other parts of creation (“in him God was pleased 519 to reconcile to himself all things, whether on earth or in heaven” (Colossians 1:20).
520 Further, our calling to ministries of reconciliation is complementary, not contradictory, to 521 our calling to share the gospel. When we seek to restore right relations—among humans, 522 all of creation, and with God—we are serving as “ambassadors for Christ, since God is 523 making his appeal through us” (2 Corinthians 5:20). The disciple who is invited to follow 524 Christ is invited to be a reconciler—a reconciler who works for unity, justice and peace.

525

526 Ever depending on forgiveness

527

528 Our calling of reconciliation depends on God’s forgiveness. We need to acknowledge 529 not only our own personal errors and omissions but also the collective errors of our

530 tradition.² These include misdeeds, such as our readiness to benefit from the conquest 531 of American Indian lands, chattel slavery and the treatment of the Jews during and after 532 the Reformation,³ in addition to failures to reach out with respect to people of all races, 533 ethnicities and cultures. Not only do we rely on forgiveness for the past, we also rely on 534 forgiveness for the present and the future. Because our responsibility for others has no 535 limits, inevitably our best efforts will fall short. We, therefore, rely on forgiveness for support 536 as we reach out into unfamiliar territory, navigating religious and cultural differences.
537 The promise of forgiveness sets us free to risk the unfamiliar. Fortunately, based on the 538 experience of those who have taken such steps, we can expect and hope that our neighbors 539 will be gracious and hospitable to us and be quite willing to overlook or forgive our well-540 intentioned mistakes. In all likelihood, they too find themselves in unfamiliar territory.

541

542 Acknowledging suffering

543

544 At the heart of Luther's "theology of the cross" is our calling to take the reality of 545 suffering seriously. Whenever possible, this means seeking ways to end suffering. At 546 other times, we have no option available to accomplish this. God, who is most fully 547 revealed through the cross and the resurrection, always comes to "be with" humans 548 and calls them to "be with" others. From this perspective, God is seen more clearly 549 through suffering—including the suffering of Jesus, the suffering of others and our own 550 suffering—than through success.

551

552 Acknowledging the reality of suffering unites us not only to God but also to one 553 another. The commonality and universality of human suffering binds us inextricably to 554 each other. This influences our understanding of our vocation. When we acknowledge 555 the suffering of those whose beliefs are different from our own and recognize the 556 commonality of suffering, we find a fuller more compassionate understanding of those 557 who differ and a common calling to alleviate it wherever it exists. At the same time, 558 when we acknowledge the suffering of other Christians who experience discrimination 559 or attacks because of their religious beliefs, we can begin to understand how inter-560 religious relations can be necessary not only for cooperation but, indeed, for survival. In 561 suffering of all forms, as neighbors who come to see each other as made in the image of 562 God, we stand together, not apart.

² We do so not because we bear personal guilt for the past but because we are responsible for the future. Repentance is a re-orientation that puts us on a different path in the present and the future.

³ See the "Repudiation of the Doctrine of Discovery" Social Policy Resolution CA16.02.04 adopted by the 2016 Churchwide Assembly and "Declaration of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America to the Jewish Community," requested by the 1993 Churchwide Assembly and adopted by the Church Council in April 1994 (both available at ELCA.org).

563 WHAT ABOUT OUR COMMITMENT TO EVANGELISM?

564

565 Throughout the centuries, and for all time, our primary calling as Christians is to share 566 the good news of Jesus Christ, who frees us to love and serve our neighbors. This calling 567 to evangelism, of witnessing to the power of life in Christ, must be carried out in all 568 aspects of our lives and work as church, including in our inter-religious relations. Only 569 then are we authentically engaging our neighbors as Christians.

571 Evangelism takes many forms, in word and in deed, always offered in love. Whether 572 through preaching, teaching, or acts of justice and mercy, “The commandment we have 573 from him is this: those who love God must love their brothers and sisters also” (1 John 574 4:21). Because the good news frees us to love and serve our neighbors, and likewise to 575 share with them why the love of Jesus calls and inspires us to do so, evangelism and 576 inter-religious engagement are both parts of our calling. The Great Commission, found 577 both in Matthew 28:19-20 and Mark 16:15-16, stands alongside the call for Christians to 578 be salt, leaven and light in the places where they live (Matthew 5:13-16; Matthew 13:33).

579

580 Historically, Lutherans have emphasized the remarkable generosity evidenced by God 581 and our own inability to do anything to contribute to our salvation. We are saved 582 by grace. Faith is a response to the love of God, not a prerequisite for that love. As 583 Lutherans, we share this good news as a compelling counter-narrative to a theology of 584 “you must believe, then God will save you,” which in Luther’s day took the form of “you 585 need to do your best, and then God will save you.”

586

587 Sharing this gift that we have been given freely is a faithful response to God’s love 588 in Jesus Christ. This is different than proselytizing or targeting certain groups for 589 conversion. God’s gift, freely given, cannot be forced upon others. Our love and care, 590 as an extension of God’s love and care, are also freely given without any contingencies.
591 We do not require others to accept a credal statement in order to receive our love and 592 care. Luther was confident that, whenever the good news is shared, the Spirit is at work.
593 This Spirit blows when and where it wills. We are called to share the good news, but 594 bringing others to Christ is ultimately God’s work through the Holy Spirit. As we are 595 taught in Luther’s Small Catechism, “I believe that by my own understanding or strength 596 I cannot believe in Jesus Christ my Lord or come to him, but instead the Holy Spirit has 597 called me through the gospel” (Explanation to the Third Article of The Apostles Creed, 598 translation in Evangelical Lutheran Worship). As individuals called to be reconcilers 599 in God’s world, we have two tasks: to share the good news and to love and serve our 600 neighbors, no matter who they are. In other words, our calling is to embody that all—601 without exception—are created in the image of God. Admittedly, we always fall short, and 602 sometimes we even forsake this calling. In the past and even today, there are examples 603 of those who have been victimized by Christians, sometimes explicitly in the name of 604 Christ. Reconciling and re-building trust with our neighbors is an important way in 605 which we re-present Christ, serving as his ambassadors, and becoming reconciled also 606 to God.

607

608 The way

609

610 But what then about a passage such as John 14:6, “I am the way and the truth and 611 the life. No one comes to the father except through me”? This passage needs to be 612 understood not in isolation, but in relation to other parts of the Bible. Its immediate 613 context is important. It occurs during Jesus’ discussion with his disciples about 614 the cross and the death that he faces. So “the way” is the way of the cross, of 615 acknowledging suffering.

616

617 “The way” of the cross does not include manipulation, judgmentalism or a claim 618 to have all the answers. As we engage with people who practice another religion, 619 we are called to ponder what it means to embody the way of the cross. From St.
620 Paul we learn the power and persuasiveness of humbleness rather than arrogance 621 in our relationship with others. “Let the same mind be in you that was in Christ 622 Jesus, who, though he was in the form of God, did not regard equality with God as 623 something to be exploited, but emptied himself, taking the form of a slave, being 624 born in human likeness. And being found in human form, he humbled himself and 625 became obedient to the point of death—even death on a cross” (Philippians 2:5-8).

626

627 The truth

628

629 Lutherans wholeheartedly agree with John 14:6 that Jesus is “the truth.” Jesus is 630 God incarnate, born among us as a human being. As Luther taught and the ELCA
631 constitution affirms, Jesus is the preeminent form of God’s Word.⁴ To know Jesus 632 is to know God. In this sense, the person of Jesus is the truth. The life, death and 633 resurrection of Jesus is at the center of our witness. This is not to say that truth is 634 absent from other religions. Human beings cannot know everything about God, nor 635 can we set limits on God.

4 The preached word is the second form, and the written Scripture is the third.

636 The life

637

638 Lutherans also confess and draw daily strength from Jesus as “the life,” the third 639 description in John 14:6. As St. Paul writes, “Do you not know that all of us who have 640 been baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? Therefore we have been 641 buried with him by baptism into death, so that, just as Christ was raised from the dead 642 by the glory of the Father, so we too might walk in newness of life” (Romans 6:3-4). It is 643 from this perspective of life in Christ that we engage our neighbors of other religions.
644 We do so with full awareness of our own dependence on God’s grace, mercy and 645 forgiveness and with trust that God in Christ has willed reconciliation for all.

646

647 As Christians, we believe that the good news of God’s grace is worth offering to others.
648 Not only may God work through others, God may also work through us to the degree 649 that we witness to a God of generosity and forgiveness, a God who loves humans, values 650 their freedom and works for their wholeness.

651

652 CONCLUSION

653

654 Our vision is a society where the dignity of every person is respected, where God’s 655 shalom reigns and all people work together for the common good. As we live or 656 work with individuals of other cultures and religions, we are called to overcome the 657 isolation that separates neighbors from one another and to serve as ambassadors of 658 Christ’s ministries of reconciliation. We are called to learn to know and understand our 659 neighbors and to work together for their well-being. We are called to work with them 660 to overcome the obstacles and suffering they face, and to build justice and peace for all 661 people and God’s creation. We are called to live in hope, not fear.

662

663 Our calling is a responsibility, yes, but it is also a joy. Engagement with our neighbors 664 enriches our lives and our faith. In relationship with our neighbors, we come to 665 understand more fully the depth and breadth of the riches of God and to appreciate 666 more deeply the wonder of God’s generous love, which we experience through the life, 667 death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. We discern more accurately how to reflect God’s 668 generosity in our thinking and in our behavior. And, as individuals and as neighbors, 669 we benefit from the increased health of our communities and from a world that is 670 increasingly just and peaceful, as God intends.

671

672 May God bless the efforts of this church and its members and participants as we set our 673 sights on this vision, as we seek to respond to God’s calling and as we strive to uphold 674 these commitments.
