LAUMEIER SCULPTURE PARK ANNOUNCES NEW OUTDOOR EXHIBITION BY 2023 VISITING ARTISTS IN RESIDENCE, LENKA CLAYTON AND PHILLIP ANDREW LEWIS

At a Glance

WHAT: A new Laumeier Sculpture Park-commissioned, large-scale installation titled A Number of Tragedies (working title) that depicts many kite-shaped aluminum sculptures embedded into a grove of trees at the Park.

WHO: Pittsburgh-based artists Lenka Clayton and Phillip Andrew Lewis, Laumeier’s 2023 Visiting Artists In Residence.

WHERE: Laumeier Sculpture Park,
12580 Rott Road, St. Louis, 63127
Outdoor Galleries, The Way Field

WHY: With playfulness and humor, Clayton and Lewis explore the interconnectivity and tension within the human-nature relationship. The colorful, tragi-comic kites that comprise their new piece at Laumeier express the amusement and creativity that kites symbolize as well as the sense of disappointment when they cease to function. This artwork suggests kites as a type of kinetic sculpture that ties the user directly to nature.

Laumeier Sculpture Park presents new sculptural commission of aluminum kites by Visiting Artists In Residence Lenka Clayton and Phillip Andrew Lewis

St. Louis, MO – This August Laumeier Sculpture Park will debut a new sculpture commission by Pittsburgh-based artists Lenka Clayton and Phillip Andrew Lewis, A Number of Tragedies (working title), on view August 26 – December 17, 2023 in Laumeier's Outdoor Galleries.

Clayton and Lewis are Laumeier's 2023 Visiting Artists In Residence, and this collaborative duo utilizes innovative approaches to conceptualism and minimalism to realize their work in sculpture, performance, and multi-media installation. With playfulness and humor, they explore interconnectivity and tension within the human-nature relationship, often with a focus on the balance between the individual and the collective.

For Laumeier, they will create a new work titled A Number of Tragedies (working title), a series of kite-shaped aluminum sculptures embedded in the branches of a grove of persimmon trees in Laumeier's Way Field. The tangled web of color, shape and string imparts a sense of humor central to Clayton and Lewis’ practice and expresses amusement, creativity, and the intersection between us and the natural world.

Kites are objects of creative play and wonder, a type of kinetic sculpture that ties the user directly to nature, toying with a delicate balance between control and chance. Clayton and Lewis’ vibrant installation will celebrate the creative expression in kite design and the participatory element of kite festivals, while taking a tongue-in-cheek look at the irony of kites being both propelled and obstructed by Mother Nature.

Clayton and Lewis explain: “For us, A Number of Tragedies, equally explores comedy and tragedy. The tangled kite forms, each a potential remnant of a day that ended in tears, are still vibrant and functioning as best they can. The diamonds trapped and, in some cases, pierced by branches still have their flapping tails somewhat animated by the wind as they tangle around one other and gently age. Nature will bring a second opening celebration in Fall when the leaves drop and the full work is revealed.”

Clayton and Lewis will also create a film inspired by their installation, documenting a demo flight with members of the Gateway Kite Club and a communal kite fly with Park visitors that will take place during the Discover Laumeier event on August 27.

Laumeier’s Curator Dana Turkovic states: “Kites have a rich history, and the image of countless kites populating the sky in the Park and sometimes in the trees, opens up many conversations... around sculpture in nature, the relationship between comedy and failure, the expressive design and function of kites, engineering, and the science of flight.”

Laumeier is also proud to announce a new sponsor of the Visiting Artist In Residence Program: 21c Museum Hotel St. Louis, which opens to the public in downtown St. Louis in August 2023. As part of this sponsorship, 21c Museum Hotel St. Louis will provide guest accommodations for Visiting Artists In Residence and co-host special programs featuring those artists for hotel guests and the public.

Laumeier’s Executive Director Lauren Ross states, “Laumeier is thrilled to begin this ongoing relationship with 21c Museum Hotel St. Louis. Laumeier has great respect for and affinity with 21c Museum Hotels. Their hotels not only offer guests unique experiences featuring a vast array of contemporary artworks, but they also support local artists and art scenes in each of the cities in which they operate. I’m certain that 21c will bring yet another exciting facet to our local arts offerings and help introduce guests to St. Louis’ rich cultural offerings.”
